of the petition, plaintiff must make an issue with respect to them in the federal court.[44]

Ultimate decision as to the removability of a cause is for the courts of the United States.[45] So, regardless of the decision of the state court, it is for the federal district court to determine for itself whether or not the cause was rightfully removed and its jurisdiction has attached,[46] and its finding is final and binding upon the state court until reversed.[47] The federal district court, however, like the state court,[48] in assuming and retaining jurisdiction acts at its peril as to the validity of its subsequent proceedings, as determined upon final appeal.[49]

[§ 254] 3. Effectuation of Removal[50]—a. In General. Upon the filing in a state court of a proper petition for removal[51] and, where required, a removal bond,[52] in a cause pending in such court which such petition and the record show to be removable upon application made to the state court,[53] the jurisdiction of such state court ceases eo instante and that of the federal court attaches,[54] without regard to or the necessity of any further action by the state be the usual practice in some jurisdictions,[63] for the state court to enter a formal order granting the application, or directing the removal. It is, however, not any such order, but rather the filing of a proper petition for removal, and a bond, where required, which terminates the jurisdiction of the state court and causes that of the federal court to attach:[64] so no order of the state court is necessary to effect a removal,[65] and an order for removal is, strictly speaking, of no effect,[66] but is at most merely a convenient mode of manifesting the court's acceptance of the application.[67] Accordingly, if a cause is removable, and the method prescribed by statute for procuring its removal has been pursued, it stands removed to the federal court without regard to what action the state court may take,[68] or even if it fails or refuses to take any action whatever;[69] and an order expressly denying a removal will not prevent the jurisdiction of the federal court from attaching.[70] So, either without any action on the part of the court, or after its refusal to grant a removal, the applicant has the right to enter a copy of the record in the federal court to which he seeks the removal of the cause, and to have the cause docketed there,[71] whereupon the federal court will proceed with the cause as if removal had expressly been granted by the state court,[72] and it is

"It is true that a plaintiff who has brought what he believes to be a nonremovable action may naturally wish to avoid the trouble of going to the United States court and there seeking for a remand, but he cannot escape therefrom by getting the state judge to agree that the case is one which cannot be removed. He must do more; he must convince his adversary as well, and that is usually a more difficult task, for, unless he does, the latter will take the case to the federal court and in self-defense he must follow, even if all that he there seeks to do is to show that in a legal sense it 'has never left the state tribunal." the duty of the state court to withhold further proceedings, upon the facts being brought to its attention.[73] If, on the other hand, a cause is not removable, an order of the state court in terms granting or directing a removal confers no jurisdiction on the federal court.[74] In the case of a cause removable upon application to the federal court rather than to the state court,[75] an order for removal made by the state court is unauthorized and void.[76]

Appeal from order of removal.[77] The proper mode of reviewing the removal of a cause is not by appeal from an order of the state court authorizing or directing the removal, but by motion in the federal court to remand the cause.[78] It would seem to be the proper rule that an appeal to the state appellate court from an order of the state court granting or directing the removal of a cause does not stay or prevent the removal, notwithstanding a state statute providing that such appeal shall stay further proceedings on the judgment appealed from;[79] but the contrary has been stated.[80]

[§ 256] C. Causes Removable on Application to Federal Court—1. Suits Subject to Prejudice or Local Influence—a. In General. Under the provisions of the statute permitting the removal from a state court to a federal court, in certain cases, of suits between citizens of different states in which it shall be made to appear to the federal court that from prejudice or local influence a party defendant will not be able to obtain justice in the state court in which the suit is pending or in any other court of the state to which he may have the right, on account thereof, to remove the same,[81] removal to the federal court is to be procured upon an application or petition addressed to the court to which the cause is sought to be removed,[82] which court receives and entertains the application, and acquires jurisdiction of the suit, if at all, by its own machinery.[83]

Petition.[84] The petition or application for removal must allege, as matter of fact, the existence of prejudice or local influence,[85] and, as a consequence thereof, an inability to obtain justice in the state courts.[86] As a general rule, the petition must show that defendant cannot obtain justice either in the court in which the suit was originally brought or in any other court or county of the state to which he may have a right to have a change of venue;[87] but when the grant or refusal of such a change of venue is wholly within the discretion of the trial judge, such showing is unnecessary.[88] In accordance with the general rule applicable to petitions for removal on account of diversity of citizenship,[89] it should be shown that the requisite difference of citizenship existed both at the time the suit was commenced[90] and at the time the application for removal is made.[91] The prejudice or local influence upon which the application is founded should be shown to exist practically contemporaneously with the presentation of such application;[92] and where the petition relates to facts or circumstances existing at a time unreasonably long before its presentment, it cannot be assumed that the prejudice or influence continues to exist, and the showing of a right to remove is therefore insufficient.[93] The petition need not be verified, if it is supported by proper affidavit or other proof;[94] and so verification by the applicant's agent or attorney in fact is sufficient.[95]

Bond. The statute relating to the removal of causes on the ground of prejudice or local influence apparently does not require any bond or security to be furnished by the petitioner or to accompany the petition for removal,[96] but expressly excepts suits removable on such ground from the provision requiring a bond in the ordinary case of removal for difference of citizenship;[97] and under an earlier statute,[98] which required the giving of a bond of a particular character upon removal on account of prejudice or local influence, it was held that the bond of a different character required in other cases of difference of citizenship was not necessary.[99]

Proof.[1] It is competent for the federal court to receive evidence of the existence of prejudice or local influence by affidavits,[2] or by depositions,[3] or by means of oral examination of witnesses in its presence.[4] The proof must be suitable to the nature of the case,[5] and such as legally, and not merely morally, to satisfy the federal court of the truth of the allegation that, from prejudice or local influence, defendant will not be able to obtain justice in the state court;[6] and accordingly, the amount and manner of proof required in each case must be left to the discretion of the court to which the application is addressed.[7] The affidavit of a credible person, who need not be the petitioner,[8] may be regarded by the court as sufficient proof,[9] and is ordinarily the least which will satisfy the requirements of the statute,[10] although if the petition for removal states the facts upon which the allegation is founded, and is verified by a credible person, it may be regarded as prima facie proof sufficient to satisfy the conscience of the court.[11] An affidavit must state facts which sufficiently evince the truth of the allegations of prejudice or influence,[12] and a mere general statement in the language of the statute or similar form,[13] or a formal statement of mere belief in the existence of such prejudice or influence,[14] is not sufficient; but an allegation of the facts upon information and belief is valid proof thereof.[15] An affidavit made prior to the commencement of the suit may be sufficient where the suit is sufficiently identified therein.[16] If more proof than that offered by the petitioner is required by the court it should be presented.[17]

[§ 257] b. Notice of Application. While there is nothing in the statute relating to the removal of causes from a state court to a federal court on account of prejudice or local influence[18] expressly requiring the party applying for such removal to give notice to the adverse party of his petition or application, and such notice accordingly is not mandatory,[19] proper practice demands that such notice be given before the matter is acted upon by the federal court to which the petition is addressed,[20] and in at least one instance the court has declined to hear the application until suitable notice should be given.[21] A reasonable time should be allowed between the service of the notice and the date fixed for the presentation of the application to the federal court, to enable the opposing party to file counter-affidavits if he so desires;[22] and it seems that if a reasonable time is not so allowed the court may grant additional time.[23] It has been held that the notice should specify upon what proofs the petitioner will rely,[24] and that if he intends to rely upon affidavits, copies of them should be attached to the notice.[25]

Petition for removal on account of prejudice or local influence see supra § 256.

[20] Bonner v. Meikle, 77 Fed. 485;

[§ 258] c. Filing and Presentment of Petition and Proof.[26] Inasmuch as the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court on the ground of prejudice or local influence is to be procured upon a petition addressed to the federal court to which removal is sought,[27] such petition should be filed in the federal court,[28] and filing it in the state court is inefficacious to remove the cause or terminate the jurisdiction of the state court.[29] It has been said, however, to be the better practice to file in the state court a certified copy of the petition presented to the federal court, with the proceedings had thereon, after a removal has been granted.[30]

[§ 259] d. Hearing and Determination. While the statute relating to the removal of causes from a state court to a federal court on the ground of prejudice or local influence, does not expressly require the federal court to which the application for removal is addressed to hold a hearing thereon,[31] it has been held that the language of the statute imports a duty on the part of the court to investigate or examine into the facts upon which the alleged inability to obtain justice in the state court rests,[32] and that it is accordingly the proper practice to allow a hearing to both sides,[33] even though such hearing is not essential to the validity of the order of removal.[34] The party opposing the removal should be allowed to present counter-affidavits to show that the alleged prejudice or local influence does not exist;[35] but a plea merely denying that the petitioner believes or has reason to believe that he will not be able to obtain justice in the state court, without affirming the absence of any adverse prejudice or influence, raises no issue.[36] The question whether the alleged prejudice or local influence exists is one of fact to be determined by the federal court,[37] and it must find the existence thereof as a fact before it can order a removal.[38] Where, however, the federal court is satisfied by the proof presented that prejudice or local influence adverse to the petitioner exists in the state court, it should grant an order for the removal of the cause.[39] It has been held that positive testimony of witnesses that they know of the existence of prejudice must be accepted as outweighing negative testimony of other witnesses that, although they have equal opportunity of knowing the facts, they do not know of such prejudice or believe it exists.[40]

Review. A finding or decision of a federal court to which a petition for removal has been addressed that prejudice and local influence adverse to the petitioner exist in the state court is not reviewable.[41]

[§ 260] e. Order for Removal. In order to effectuate the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court on the ground of prejudice or local influence, an order for such removal must be made by the federal court,[42] and filed in the state court in which the suit is pending;[43] and the state court does not lose jurisdiction until that is done.[44] A mere finding that a right to remove exists, without an order that the cause be removed, is not sufficient to work a removal.[45]

Order by state court for the removal of the cause is ineffectual and void, when not made in response to any order of the federal court granting removal.[46]

[§ 261] 2. Suits and Prosecutions against Revenue Officers and Others. The statute relating to the removal from a state court to a federal court of civil suits and criminal prosecutions against revenue officers of the United States, or persons acting under or by the authority of such officer or holding property by title derived from such officer, or against officers of the courts of the United States or officers of either house of congress,[47] provides for the removal of such suits or prosecutions upon a verified petition of defendant, setting forth the nature of the proceeding, and which, together with a certificate of the attorney for the petitioner that he believes the matters set forth in the petition to be true, is required to be presented to the federal court to which removal is sought, if in session, and if such court is not in session to be presented to and filed in the office of the clerk thereof; whereupon, it is provided, the cause shall be docketed in the federal court and shall proceed as a cause originally commenced in that court, but all bail or other security given shall continue with the same force and effect as though the cause had proceeded to final judgment and execution in the state court. It is further provided by the statute that the clerk of the federal court shall issue a writ of certiorari to the state court requiring it to send to the federal court its record, except where the proceeding was commenced by capias or similar proceeding for a personal arrest, in which case the clerk shall issue a writ of habeas corpus cum causa, a duplicate of which shall be delivered to the clerk of the state court or left at his office by the marshal or his deputy or other authorized person, whereupon it shall be the duty of the state court to stay all further proceedings in the cause, and the suit shall be held to be removed to the federal court, and any further proceedings in the state court shall be void. If defendant in the suit or prosecution be in actual custody, the statute provides that it shall be the duty of the marshal of the federal court, by virtue of the writ of habeas corpus, to take defendant into his custody, to be dealt with according to the order of the court or, in vacation, of a judge thereof. It is further provided that if, upon the removal of such suit or prosecution, it is made to appear that no copy of the record in the state court can be obtained, the federal court may require plaintiff to proceed de novo and to file a declaration of his cause of action, and the parties may then proceed as in actions originally brought in the federal court; and that on failure of plaintiff so to proceed a judgment of non prosequitur may be rendered against him, with costs for defendant.[48]

Petition. No removal of a suit or prosecution against a revenue officer or other officer or person specified in the statute can be had under the provisions thereof except upon the presentment or filing of a proper petition[49] and the certificate of an attorney,[50] as therein prescribed.[51] Although there is authority for the view that a petition by an officer of a character mentioned in the statute is sufficient when it avers in general language that he is being sued for and on account of acts done by him by virtue or under color of his office, without setting forth the particular nature of the cause of action[52] or describing the circumstances under which the act forming the basis of the proceeding was committed,[53] it would seem to be the better rule that, under the statutory requirement that the petition shall set forth the nature of the case,[54] facts, as contradistinguished from mere opinions and conclusions of law, should be stated which show that the suit or proceeding is one comprehended within the statute,[55] and that it must be made to appear in and by the petition that the acts which gave rise to the cause of action were in fact connected with the official duties of the officer being sued or whose acts are in question.[56] The petition of an officer mentioned in the statute must positively aver or admit the commission of the act upon which the suit or prosecution is based,[57] or of some act which was done under color of his office or of the law and upon which the proceeding is founded,[58] since the statute refers only to acts done;[59] but it need not show the commission of the precise act charged against the petitioner,[60] and, of course, it need not admit, but may deny, that the act was criminal in character or such as to impose liability upon him.[61] On the other hand, it need not be shown that no criminality attached to the acts done by such officer or that no liability on his part arose therefrom.[62] The petition should clearly show that the officer's relation to the transaction on which the prosecution is based was confined to his official acts, and negative the possibility that he did other than official acts in connection therewith;[63] and where the petition on its face shows that the acts done by the officer were not within his official authority, removal will be denied.[64] An allegation or showing that the act was done by the officer under and by right of his office, and in the discharge of his official duty,[65] or that as such officer he was performing specified acts which were a part of his official duties at the time the cause of action arose,[66] is a sufficient claim of right and authority under the law to show that the case is within the statute, without showing more fully the capacity in which he was acting,[67] or under what laws the acts in question were performed.[68] The petition need not contain any allegation of local prejudice against defendant.[69] Where the United States district attorney appears for the removing defendant a petition signed by him and designating such defendant is within the statute.[70] Where two or more defendants apply for removal, verification of the petition by any one of them is sufficient.[71]

Amendment of petition. Leave to amend a petition for removal filed by a revenue or other officer charged in the state court with the commission of a crime is not to be denied merely because the original petition was lacking in candor.[72]

Presentment or filing. Two conflicting views have been advanced by the courts as to the purpose and sufficiency of presenting the removal papers to the federal court or filing them with the clerk, as required by statute.[73] On the one hand, it has been held by a state court that such presentment or filing is for the purpose of permitting the court or clerk to determine whether or not the papers are sufficient upon their face to entitle defendant to remove the cause,[74] and that such determination is judicial in its nature and requires the exercise of an official judgment and discretion,[75] and, accordingly, that a deputy clerk, having authority to act for his principal only in ministerial matters, is without authority to pass upon the petition.[76] In the same case, however, the federal court laid down the rule that the presentment or filing is merely to enable the court or its clerk to see that the formal requirements of the law have been complied with,[77] and that such function may validly be performed by the deputy clerk, in the absence of his superior.[78] Where the federal court to which removal is sought is not in session, and sessions of such court are held at two or more places in the district, the removal papers should be filed in the office of the clerk at the place where the next session is to be held;[79] but filing at another place is not ground for remanding the cause,[80] since it may, upon motion, be transferred to a place where a session is sooner to be held or where the court is in session.[81]

Effectuation of removal. It has been held that the state court in which is pending a suit or prosecution of the character mentioned in the statute[82] does not lose its jurisdiction thereof, and a removal to the federal court is not effectuated until a writ of certiorari or habeas corpus, as provided for by the statute,[83] has been delivered to the clerk of the state court,[84] and that the federal court has authority to hear the facts and determine whether or not a right of removal exists, before issuing the writ.[85] On the other hand, there is authority for the view that where a duly verified petition for the removal of a suit or prosecution comprehended within the terms of the statute is presented to or filed in the federal court, together with a proper certificate of counsel, in accordance with the statutory requirements, and the petition on its face shows sufficient grounds for removal, its allegations must be taken as true,[86] and the cause is ipso facto removed to the federal court,[87] it having been said that the purpose of the writ is not to oust the state court of jurisdiction, and that it is not essential to the removal,[88] but is merely required in order to notify the state court that jurisdiction has been assumed by the federal court,[89] and to require a return to the latter court of the record of the state court[90] or the delivery of the person of defendant.[91] No order of the federal court[92] or of the state court[93] is necessary to effectuate the removal. While it has been held that, from the nature of the matter, the state court has authority to pass upon the sufficiency of the writ to oust its jurisdiction,[94] the better rule would seem to be that when a writ sufficient on its face is delivered to the state court, it has no authority to decide whether the cause is a reasonable one, but must accept the statements and command of the writ and proceed no further.[95]

Writ.[96] Where the allegations of the petition for removal are controverted or denied, it is the better practice not to issue the writ of certiorari or habeas corpus, as provided for by the removal statute,[97] until after the removability of the suit or proceeding has been determined,[98] unless such an emergency exists that, in order to protect the petitioner's rights, the writ should issue at once.[99] While it has been held by a state court that the writ must show that the federal court to which the cause is sought to be removed, or its clerk, has allowed the petition for removal, and that it has been filed and the cause entered upon the docket of such court,[1] the federal court in the same case was of opinion that such a requirement would introduce a new feature into the writ as known to the common law, and that no such showing need be made therein.[2] It has been held by a federal court that the address of a writ of certiorari to the United States marshal of the district, commanding him to make known to the clerk of the state court the removal of the case and that such court is required to send a transcript of the record to the federal court, is equivalent to the address of the writ to the state court;[3] but the state court in the same case announced a contrary opinion.[4] Since the statute makes no provision for any other writ than that of habeas corpus cum causa in the case of a prosecution which was commenced by a capias or other process of arrest, it has been held that such writ is proper whether the petitioner is in actual custody or is out on bail.[5] It has been pointed out, however, that in the latter case such writ is not well adapted to the purpose in view,[6] and that the difficulty is sometimes solved in such circumstances by addressing the writ to the United States marshal of the district and causing a duplicate to be delivered to the clerk of the state court;[7] and there is authority for the view that when the petitioner is so in bail and not in custody, no writ of habeas corpus is necessary.[8] Ordinarily the writ of habeas corpus cum causa serves to cause the record to be transmitted to the federal court, as part of the clerk's obedience to the command that cause be shown for the petitioner's detention.[9]

[§ 262] 3. Actions by Aliens against Civil Officers of United States. The statute relating to the removal from a state court to a federal court of a personal action brought by an alien against one who is, or at the time the cause of action accrued was, a civil officer of the United States, being a nonresident of the state where the action is brought, provides for the removal of such actions in the same manner as is prescribed by the statute relating to the removal of suits and prosecutions against revenue officers and other officers and persons mentioned therein.[10–11]

[§ 263] 4. Proceedings against Persons in Military Service. The statute authorizing the removal to the federal courts of certain civil and criminal prosecutions commenced in any court of a state against any officer, soldier, or other person in the military service of the United States[12] provides that such suit or prosecution may be removed for trial into the district court of the United States in the manner prescribed in section 33 of the Act of March 3, 1911, for the codification, revision and amendment of the laws relating to the judiciary,[13] which section relates to the removal of suits and prosecutions against certain federal officers and others.[14]

[§ 264] D. Federal Court to Which Cause Removed.[15] It is the generally recognized rule that the proper and only court of the United States to which a cause is removable, if at all, from a court of a state is the district court of the district within the boundaries of which is situate the state court in which the cause is pending, at the time of removal,[16] without regard to where it originated,[17] and that removal cannot be had to the district of defendant's residence, where that is different from the district within which the suit is pending in the state court,[18] the rights of a plaintiff to bring in a federal court, and of a defendant to remove to such court, a cause over which the state and federal courts have concurrent jurisdiction not being reciprocal.[19] There is authority, however, for the view that the court to which removal may properly be had is the district court of the district in which defendant resides;[20] and it has even been held that the district in which plaintiff resides is the proper district to which to remove the cause.[21]

As between different divisions of same district, it is provided by statute that the removal shall be to the district court in the division in which is situate the county from which the cause is removed.[22] A removal to any other division is, accordingly, improper.[23]

[§ 265] E. Operation and Effect of Removal—1. As to State Court—a. In General. Where a cause has been removed from a state court to a federal court, the operation and effect of such removal upon the jurisdiction of the state court and upon the validity of its further proceedings depend upon whether or not a right to remove in fact existed.[24] The question arises particularly in those classes of cases in which the application for removal is made to the state court,[25] since such court has no power to determine the merits of the application,[26] but a removal is effectuated by the mere fact of filing an application showing on its face an apparent right to remove.[27]

[§ 266] b. Cause Properly Removed. Where a right to remove a cause from a state court to a federal court exists, and a removal is properly effectuated,[28] the state court is thereby divested of jurisdiction;[29] and it has no power to proceed further,[30] save to enter an order of removal,[31] unless and until the cause is thereafter remanded by the federal court.[32] Pending any such remand, therefore, or if the cause is not remanded, any further proceedings had or orders made there by such state court are not merely erroneous,[33] but coram non judice[34] and absolutely void.[35] So the state court cannot allow plaintiff to dismiss the action[36] or to submit to a voluntary nonsuit,[37] nor enter an order of dismissal,[38] even, it has been held, when a motion to dismiss is already pending at the time the application for removal is made,[39] although upon this latter point there is authority to the contrary;[40] nor has such court power to take a default,[41] to hear exceptions,[42] to appoint a receiver,[43] to forfeit a bond,[44] or to permit plaintiff to amend his pleadings,[45] nor even, it has been held, to grant a stay of proceedings.[46] The irregularity, however, in making a motion in the state court after a removal of the cause had been effected is waived by the adverse party by seeking a postponement of the hearing on the motion in the federal court without objection to its validity or propriety.[47] If, notwithstanding the removal, the state court proceeds with the case, defendant may by answer raise the question of jurisdiction;[48] if a judgment is rendered it should be reversed on appeal;[49] and upon final decision by the state court of last resort, if it be adverse to him, defendant may have the decision reviewed and reversed by the supreme court of the United States.[50] So the proper rule would seem to be that the state court is without jurisdiction, after the cause has been removed, to enter a judgment for costs, and that an attempt to do so is a nullity;[51] but there is authority for the view that such a judgment may validly be rendered, even though a part or all of the costs have accrued in proceedings improperly had in such court after removal had been effectuated,[52] provided that judgment should not be entered until after the determination of the case by the federal court, but should abide its decision.[53] The publication, however, after removal has been effectuated, of a notice of an attachment theretofore levied, under a statute requiring such publication for a prescribed time, is not ineffective or invalid, such publication being not a proceeding in the state court but an extrajudicial act.[54]

Second action on same cause. Where an action has been removed from a state court to a federal court and while it is pending therein, the state court cannot take jurisdiction of a second action, commenced after such removal, on the same cause between the same parties.[55]

Retaking jurisdiction.[56] Where the jurisdiction of the state court has been lost by reason of proper proceedings for a removal of the cause,[57] such court cannot retake or regain jurisdiction by setting aside its acceptance or approval of the application,[58] nor is its jurisdiction restored even though the state appellate court holds that the removal was irregular or improper,[59] it being for the federal court to pass upon the question of removability and to remand the cause if it should not have been removed.[60]

Withdrawal of application for removal.[61] It has been held that one by whom a petition for the removal of a cause has been filed has the right, before the transfer to the federal court has been perfected by filing a transcript of the record to the state court,[62] to withdraw his petition and waive his right to remove,[63] and that by such withdrawal the jurisdiction of the state court is restored.[64] Similarly, it has been held that where plaintiff procures the withdrawal of an application for removal, founded upon the existence of a separable controversy, before any action thereon has been taken in either court, and dismisses his suit as to the removing defendant, the jurisdiction of the state court is restored as to the other parties defendant.[65]

[§ 267] c. Cause Subsequently Remanded for Want of Jurisdiction.[66] Where the right to remove a cause from a state court to a federal court does not in fact exist, and after an attempted or colorable removal the cause is remanded by the federal court for want of jurisdiction,[67] the jurisdiction of the state court is not to be regarded as ever having been lost,[68] and so proceedings had in the state court after the attempted removal and pending the remand are generally held to be valid and effectual,[69] except, perhaps, where such proceedings were in violation of an injunction lawfully issued by the federal court;[70] but there is some authority to the contrary.[71] It has been held that during the time the cause is pending in the federal court, defendant is not required to answer or plead in the state court,[72] and that his failure to do so does not constitute a waiver of his right to interpose a plea or defense after the cause has been remanded;[73] but the contrary has also been held.[74] However, so long as the cause remains in the federal court the state court is powerless to give effect to a judgment rendered therein.[75]

[§ 268] 2. As to Federal Court. Proceedings for the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court, when regular in form and good upon their face,[77] give such federal court a prima facie right to proceed to try the cause upon its merits,[78] which right is exclusive[79] and complete,[80] extending to auxiliary or incidental matters as well as to the main suit,[81] and continues until it is finally established that the court is without jurisdiction;[82] but if its jurisdiction was in fact lacking at the time of removal, and no right of removal existed, any action or proceedings by such court looking toward a determination of the controversy are of no force or effect,[83] and any findings[84] or orders[85] made by it, other than an order of remand,[86] are null and void.[87]

[§ 269] 3. As Abandonment of Appeal from Interlocutory Orders.[88] The removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court operates as an abandonment of an appeal previously taken from an interlocutory order of the state court, at least where such appeal has not been perfected, by entering or docketing the appeal in the appellate court.[89]

XIV. TRANSCRIPT OF RECORD OF STATE COURT

[By Eustace W. Tomlinson]

[§ 270] A. In General. The statutes of the United States providing for the removal of causes from a state court to a federal court require a transcript of the record and proceedings in the state court to be filed in the federal court to which the cause has been removed, in the case of causes removable on the ground of difference of citizenship, but not involving prejudice or local influence, or because arising under the federal constitution, laws or treaties,[90] suits or prosecutions against persons asserting or relying upon civil rights laws,[91] actions concerning land claimed under grants from different states,[92] suits or prosecutions against revenue officers and others,[93] and actions by aliens against civil officers of the United States;[94] and although the statute prescribing the procedure for removal in other cases of diversity of citizenship expressly excludes from its provisions causes removable on the ground of prejudice or local influence, and does not in terms require a transcript to be filed in the federal court,[95] such filing is appropriate and necessary, in the orderly administration of affairs, to the transfer of the cause.[96] In those classes of cases in which the application to remove is made to the state court rather than to the federal court,[97] the filing of the transcript is sufficient to enter the cause in the latter court,[98] and no formal motion to docket it is necessary.[99] The attachment of the federal jurisdiction does not, however, await the filing of the transcript;[1] but until it has been filed the federal court can take no proceedings in the cause.[2]

Failure to file transcript. Where the removing party fails to file a transcript and docket the cause in the federal court, the remedy of the opposite party is to make a showing in the state court that the removal has been abandoned, and proceed on the removal bond.[3]

Proceedings in federal court after removal see infra §§ 275–301.

[§ 271] B. Form and Contents.[4] Upon the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court, all papers filed and proceedings had in the cause in the state court are properly a part of the record to be transmitted to the federal court.[5] Accordingly, the transcript should contain or set forth the pleadings,[6] all depositions on file in the state court,[7] all ancillary proceedings,[8] such as garnishee proceedings in another county in the state,[9] and all entries in the journals of the state court.[10] Testimony taken after the removal had been effected by a referee theretofore appointed is not a part of the record.[11] In the case of the removal of a criminal prosecution, the indictment is ordinarily the only record which the transcript need contain or comprise.[12] An omission of a small part of the record is ordinarily not fatal, but may be cured upon a suggestion of a diminution of the record.[13]

Original papers or certified copies. It has been said to be immaterial whether the original papers or a certified copy of them be transmitted to the federal court;[14] but it has been held that where the state court refuses to grant a removal, certified copies must be procured and filed in the federal court, and that the original papers must remain in the state court.[15]

Legibility. It has been said that the federal court is warranted in striking from its files any portions of a transcript which are illegible or very indistinct.[16]

[§ 272] C. By Whom Transcript Should Be Filed. The transcript of the record and proceedings had in a cause in a state court should ordinarily be filed in the federal court, upon the removal of the cause thereto, by the petitioner for removal.[17] Any other party, however, may file the transcript, upon leave obtained from the federal court to which the cause has been removed,[18] or even without such leave if immediate action in the case is required for the protection of his interests.[19] It is not the duty of the clerk of the state court to file the transcript,[20] although it is by statute expressly made his duty to prepare and furnish it.[21]

[§ 273] D. Time for Filing. The statute relating to the removal, from a state court to a federal court, of causes arising under the constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, or involving difference of citizenship, except suits removable on the ground of prejudice or local influence, provides for the entry in the federal court of a certified copy of the record of the suit within thirty days from the date of filing the petition for removal.[22] The statutes relating to the removal of suits and prosecutions against persons asserting or relying on civil rights laws,[23] actions concerning land claimed under grants from different states,[24] suits and prosecutions against revenue officers and others,[25] and actions by aliens against civil officers of the United States,[26] while not expressly prescribing the time at or within which the transcript shall be filed, do provide for the removal of such causes for trial in the district court next to be held in the district, which requirement, it is further provided, shall be deemed to refer to the terms of the district court in the division in which is situate the county from which the removal is taken,[27] and from which it would seem clear that the transcript should be filed not later than the commencement of such next term.[28] There appears to be no provision of the statute prescribing the time for filing the transcript or the time for trial in the case of suits removed on account of prejudice or local influence.[29] Unless such filing is rendered impossible by failure or refusal of the clerk of the state court to furnish a transcript,[30] the right to perfect the removal is lost if the transcript is not filed by or within the time fixed by statute,[31] except as delay beyond such time may be excused by the federal court[32] or waived by the adverse party,[33] and except, it has been held, that in those classes of cases in which application for removal must be made to the state court,[34] the applicant may postpone the filing until such court has acted upon his petition;[35] but on the point last stated there is authority to the contrary.[36] The provisions fixing the time by or within which the transcript must be filed do not prevent it from being filed before the prescribed time or the expiration of the prescribed period.[37]

Excusing lateness. The federal court may and ordinarily will grant leave to file a transcript after the statutory time, where good cause is shown,[38] as where the applicant was misinformed by the clerk of such court concerning the date of the commencement of its next term;[39] but a failure to file the transcript at the proper time through mere inadvertence is not excusable,[40] and where the applicant has been guilty of laches he cannot be permitted to file the transcript after the expiration of the statutory time.[41]

Waiver of delay. The failure of an applicant for removal to file the transcript within the time fixed by statute may be waived by the adverse party.[42] Thus it has been held that where the applicant's adversary forces him, after the state court has denied removal, to proceed with the cause in such court, he thereby waives the requirement of the statute as to time until the state court lets go its jurisdiction.[43]

[§ 274] E. Proceedings To Compel Furnishing of Transcript or To Supply Record.[44] A party or person having a right to remove a cause from a state court to a federal court is entitled, upon complying with the formalities requisite to procure or effectuate a removal, to demand from the clerk of the state court a certified copy of the record of the cause therein;[45] but the clerk may rightfully refuse to furnish it until his proper fees have been paid or tendered unto him.[46] It is provided by statute that, in any removable cause, if such clerk shall refuse to any party or person applying for removal a copy of the record therein, after tender of legal fees, the federal court to which the cause is removable may issue a writ of certiorari to such state court commanding it to make return of the record of the cause, and may enforce such writ according to law;[47] and it is also provided that if the clerk of the state court, upon demand and the payment or tender of the legal fees, refuses or neglects to deliver to a party certified copies of the records and proceedings in such court, the federal court, on proof by affidavit of such refusal or neglect, may direct such record to be supplied by affidavit or otherwise, as the circumstances of the case may require and allow, whereupon the case shall proceed in the federal court as if certified copies were regularly before it.[48] The statute further provides that if it shall be impossible for the party or person removing a cause to obtain a copy of the record of the cause in the state court, on account of the refusal of its clerk to furnish such copy on payment of legal fees, or for any other reason, the federal court shall make an order requiring the filing of a copy of the paper or proceeding by which the suit was commenced, and in default of compliance therewith shall dismiss the case, but if such order is complied with, shall require the other party to plead, and the cause shall then proceed to final judgment; or the federal court may require the parties to plead de novo, in which case the bond, if any was given, is discharged so far as it requires a copy of the record to be entered in the federal court.[49] While there would seem to be no necessary conflict between the various parts of the statute, it has been held, in a case in which it would seem the removing party was attempting to proceed under the provisions relating to supplying the record by affidavit, although without expressly referring to the statute, that the procedure adopted was in flat violation of the provisions authorizing the issuance of the writ of certiorari.[50]

Certiorari.[51] A petition for a writ of certiorari to compel the return to the federal court of the record of the cause in the state court must show that the removal was applied for or taken at or within the time prescribed by statute,[52] and must be presented to the federal court within the time allowed by statute for filing the transcript.[53] The writ may be issued to compel the certification of the record in order that the federal court may pass upon the removability of a cause, where the state court has refused to grant or recognize a removal.[54] No order of the state court is necessary to authorize or require its clerk to certify the record to the federal court in obedience to the writ.[55]

Supplying record. It has been suggested that it would be proper to permit the record of the cause to be supplied by affidavit, where the petitioner is a pauper and unable to pay the fees of the clerk of the state court for a transcript.[56]

XV. PROCEEDINGS IN, AND DISPOSITION OF, CAUSE AFTER REMOVAL[57]

[By Eustace W. Tomlinson]

[§ 275] A. In General. In view of the provision of the statute that a federal court to which a cause shall have been removed from a state court shall proceed in such cause as if it had been originally commenced therein and the same proceedings had been taken in the federal court as shall have been had in the cause in the state court prior to the removal,[58] and the further provision that all bonds, undertakings, or security given by either party to the cause prior to its removal shall remain valid and effectual notwithstanding the removal, and that all injunctions, orders, and other proceedings had in the cause prior to its removal shall remain in full force and effect until dissolved or modified by the federal court to which the cause is removed,[59] the mode of procedure in a cause after its removal must be substantially in accordance with the practice in the federal courts in causes originally commenced therein,[60] and the case must go on as if originally commenced in the court to which it is removed,[61] the proceedings already had in the state court standing as if had in the federal court,[62] and the federal court taking the cause at the point where the state court left off.[63] For the purpose of further proceedings, therefore, a removal is analogous to a change of venue,[64] not to an appeal;[65] and for the purpose of ascertaining the time at which the suit was commenced the jurisdiction of the federal court will be deemed to relate back to the time jurisdiction was originally acquired by the state court.[66]

[§ 276] B. Proceedings pending Expiration of Time for Perfecting Removal. In view of the provisions of the statute relating to the filing in a federal court, to which a cause has been removed from a state court, of a transcript of the record of the cause in the state court,[67] that upon the transcript being so filed the cause shall then proceed in the same manner as if it had been originally commenced in the federal court,[68] it is ordinarily improper for such court to proceed in the cause until the expiration of the time within which the transcript is required to be filed and at which the parties are required to proceed.[69] Since, however, the effectuation of the removal and the attachment of the federal court's jurisdiction do not depend upon or await such filing,[70] the court may, upon actual presentation of the transcript,[71] and upon such notice as may be prescribed by rule or otherwise,[72] make provisional or interlocutory orders necessary to protect the rights of the parties and preserve the status quo, notwithstanding the fact that the time within which the transcript must necessarily be filed or the parties must proceed has not yet expired.[73]

[§ 277] C. Time To Plead and Proceed.[74] Under the statute relating to the removal, from a state court to a federal court, of causes arising under the constitution, laws, or treaties of the United States, or involving difference of citizenship, except suits removed on the ground of prejudice or local influence,[75] the removing defendant has thirty days after filing in the federal court a transcript of the record of the state court within which to plead, answer or demur to plaintiff's declaration or complaint;[76] and the timely filing of such demurrer, answer, or plea, while not mandatory or jurisdictional in the sense that the time so prescribed may not be waived by the parties or extended by the court,[77] is an essential step necessary to be taken by defendant before the cause can proceed.[78] Such provision applies, however, only to defendants who have been served with process;[79] and where a defendant has not been served but appeared only to remove the cause he is not bound to answer until process has been issued by the federal court and served upon him.[80] The statutes providing for the removal of other classes of causes than those involving diversity of citizenship or a federal question do not expressly prescribe the time at or within which defendant must plead or proceed, except as they require removal to be taken to the term of the federal court next ensuing,[81] on or before the first day of which the transcript of the record of the state court must be filed;[82] and in such causes the rule appears to be that unless an extension of time is obtained from the federal court, as has been said to be the usual practice,[83] or unless a different time is fixed by rule of such court,[84] defendant must plead, according to some authorities, within such time after the plaintiff's pleading was filed in the state court as is prescribed by the state law,[85] or, according to others, at the next rule day after the injunction of such prescribed time,[86] except as the time for pleading had been extended by the state court before the removal,[87] omitting, however, from the computation the period between the initiation of proceedings for removal and the date upon which the transcript of the record is required to be filed in the federal court.[88] Until the time required by statute the parties need not appear or proceed in the federal court.[89] The statutory provisions with respect to the time of pleading apply to pleas to the jurisdiction, founded on want of service in the state court, as well as to pleadings going to the merits.[90]

[a] Effect of change in statute as to time of filing and proceeding.—The adoption of the present statutory provision (USCA tit 28 § 72), requiring the transcript in cases arising under the federal constitution, laws, or treaties, or involving diversity of citizenship, to be filed and the parties to proceed within thirty days after removal, instead of on the first day of the next ensuing term of the federal court, as was required by the former statute, did not enlarge or diminish the power of the federal court to proceed before the time at which the transcript is required to be filed. "As jurisdiction over the case itself is not to be left in absolute suspense between its cessation in the state court and the next session of the United States . . . court, the very necessities of justice, and the preservation of the rights of the plaintiff, would demand that the latter court should exert its jurisdictional power, under certain contingencies, ad interim. This, it has been held, it may do on presentation of the record and notice to the adverse party, in the instance of issuing the writ of injunction, or some restraining order to preserve the status of the case, or to appoint a receiver, and to issue the writ of attachment in aid of the suit. . . . These are in the nature of provisional remedies and orders, designed to preserve the essential rights of the parties, in preventing a failure of justice. In other words, they are agencies to preserve the statu quo of the parties prior to the act of removal." Kansas City, etc., R. Co. v. Interstate Lumber Co., 36 Fed. 9, 11.

[a] Rule stated.—It has been said to be the result of all the authorities: First, that the federal court during the intermediate time between the effectuation of the removal and the time at which the transcript is required to be filed has the most plenary jurisdiction over the cause, and may do with it anything which it could do with a cause originally brought in the court or that any court may do with any case of which it has acquired rightful jurisdiction; but in the doing of those things it must be governed, as in all cases, by the rules of practice and procedure applicable to the particular class of cases to which the one in hand belongs. Second, that in cases removed from a state court the acts of congress regulating removal have prescribed the day on which the parties to the suit are required to appear in the federal court so that the cause may proceed in the ordinary way to a final hearing in due course of proper practice and procedure, and until that time they are not required to appear and proceed; but, upon due notice, if any extraordinary procedure be necessary to preserve the property in litigation or the rights of the litigants, either party may be required to appear for such extraordinary purpose. So, while the court has jurisdiction to proceed even erroneously, it has no rightful authority to proceed before the statutory time, and it is error to hear, before that time, any application not falling within the limits above indicated. Hamilton v. Fowler, 83 Fed. 321.

[b] What orders may be made and proceedings taken by the court, intermediate the effectuation of the removal and the time for filing the transcript, depends upon the circumstances of each case. Hamilton v. Fowler, 83 Fed. 321.

Extension of time. Whether or not to allow a defendant to plead after the expiration of the time prescribed by statute is a matter in the sound legal discretion of the federal court,[91] and should not be permitted if prejudice to plaintiff may result therefrom.[92] It has been held that a motion to remand extends the time for pleading to the next rule day after its determination.[93]

[§ 278] D. Proceeding on Law or Equity Side of Court. Proceedings in a federal court to which a cause has been removed from a state court should be had on either the law or the equity side of the court as the essential nature of the cause and the relief demanded make necessary and proper,[94] regardless of state legislation permitting the cause to be maintained upon the other side in the state courts;[95] and no stipulation of the parties can make a suit cognizable on the side of the court to which it does not properly belong.[96] Where plaintiff proceeds after removal on the wrong side of the court, the proper practice ordinarily is to sustain a demurrer to his pleading, without prejudice to his right to replead on the other side,[97] or to dismiss his action or suit without prejudice if he fails to show a right to relief on the side of the court to which he has removed the cause,[98] and if judgment is given in his favor in proceedings upon the wrong side, the circuit court of appeals, in reversing the judgment on that ground, may grant leave to apply for permission to amend and to proceed in equity[99] or at common law,[1] as may be proper, unless objection was made and sustained in the lower court and plaintiff refused to amend;[2] but where a suit removed to the equity side of the docket cannot be maintained there merely because plaintiff has an adequate remedy at law, the cause should not be dismissed[3] or remanded,[4] but should be transferred to the law side of the court.[5]

[§ 279] E. Repleader and Recasting of Cause.[6] When an ordinary action at law is removed from a state court to a federal court, no other or different pleadings are required in the federal court than in the state court, and repleading is unnecessary;[7] but where the cause, although cognizable at law, was brought in an equity court of the state, under legislation permitting such practice, plaintiff must replead, after removal, according to the forms of a court of law.[8] Similarly, in an equitable suit, if plaintiff's pleading is in the usual form of a bill in equity, even though not in strict accordance with the federal equity rules, a repleader is not necessary,[9] although it has been said to be the better practice;[10] but if the pleading is not in form a proper bill in equity, and relief cannot be afforded except upon the equity side of the federal court, a repleader is required.[11] Where legal and equitable grounds of relief were united in one suit in the state court, it should be recast, after removal, into two causes, and a repleader is accordingly necessary,[12] since in the federal courts the joinder of legal and equitable causes is prohibited.[13] When a cause is so recast and divided into two causes, neither of them will be deemed to constitute a new suit, but each is treated as a continuation of that which was removed;[14] and neither of such causes is abandoned by the severance, but both remain on their respective sides of the docket.[15]

Mode of procuring repleader. The necessity of a repleader may be raised by a motion for a repleader,[16] or by a demurrer,[17] but not, it seems, by a motion to remand.[18]

If repleader is not had, where it is necessary or proper, so much of the pleadings as present matters not cognizable on that side of the federal court to which the cause has been removed will be stricken out or disregarded, without prejudice to its presentation in a new action or suit.[19] If, however, the court proceeds with the cause without any repleader or recasting of the cause being had and without objection, a judgment rendered by it is not void or subject to collateral attack.[20]

[§ 280] F. Waiver of Objection to Service of Process of State Court.[21] While the mere act of removing a cause from a state court to a federal court, or the fact of its effectuation, does not of itself deprive the removing party of the right to make objection in the federal court of the sufficiency of the original process in the suit or of its service upon him,[22] the provision of the statutes that after removal "the cause shall proceed" in the federal court[23] not affecting his rights in that respect,[24] a general appearance in the federal court after the cause has been removed thereto,[25] or the filing of an answer or otherwise pleading to the merits,[26] constitutes a waiver of any objections to the jurisdiction of the state court, over the person of defendant, founded upon defects in its process or in the service thereof, and consequently the removing party cannot object on any such ground to the right of the federal court to proceed with the cause.[27]

[a] Repeal of former statute.—The provision of Rev. [§ 281] G. Effect of Acts of, and Proceedings in, State Court before Removal—1. Orders and Decisions. The removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court does not vacate any orders or decisions previously made in the cause by the state court, but, under the express provisions of the statute,[28] they remain in force,[29] and the federal court will ordinarily treat such an order or decision as conclusive upon itself and upon the parties to the same extent that it would have concluded the parties and the state court if the cause had remained therein.[30] Upon the same principle, however, the federal court may permit a question upon which the state court has theretofore ruled to be reopened, and may modify or set aside the order made, if it is satisfied that such court was mistaken in its ruling or decision;[31] and where the matter relates to the service of the original process of the state court and, consequently, affects the jurisdiction of the federal court, it may determine the question for itself, regardless of the decision of the state court,[32] although in so doing it must apply the provisions of the state statutes, rather than those of the act of congress or the practice of the federal courts,[33] unless such state statutes authorize service in a mode or under circumstances not consonant with the provisions of the federal constitution relating to due process of law.[34]

Renewal of motion denied by state court. Where a motion was denied by a state court previous to the removal of the cause, leave to renew such motion should be procured from the federal court, after removal, before so doing.[35] Such leave should not be granted except upon such a showing as would justify a rehearing or reargument under the practice of the state court from which the cause was removed.[36]

Setting aside order. An order entered irregularly, as prematurely or without proper notice, by a state court before the removal of the cause may be set aside by the federal court on motion of a party prejudiced thereby.[37]

On appeal to the circuit court of appeals or the supreme court of the United States from a judgment or decree of the federal district court, an order made by a state court in the cause before removal stands no higher than if the same order had been made by such district court.[38]

[§ 282] 2. Attachments, Delivery Bonds, and Security Given or Taken. Under the express provisions of the statutes relating to the removal of causes from a state court to a federal court,[39] all attachments and sequestrations levied or effected, and all bonds, undertakings, and security given or taken in the state court before the removal remain in force and effectual unless and until they are set aside, dissolved, or modified by the federal court,[40] even though, in the case of an attachment, the federal court could not originally have issued the writ;[41] and the federal court may authorize its marshal to take into his custody property held by the sheriff under process issued from the state court before the remand.[42] Where the jurisdiction of the state court was validly acquired, under the state laws and practice, by attachment, without personal service,[43] the jurisdiction of the federal court to which the cause has been properly removed is likewise valid,[44] even though the federal court could not originally have acquired jurisdiction in such manner;[45] and in such case the federal court may cause process to be served by publication in accordance with a state statute providing therefor.[46]

Sureties on a delivery bond or other forthcoming bond given or taken in the state court remain liable thereon, notwithstanding the removal.[47]

Abatement or dissolution of attachment.[48] A party prejudiced by an unauthorized or improper attachment issued by a state court may procure its abatement or dissolution upon motion to the federal court after the removal of the cause.[49]

[§ 283] 3. Injunctions.[50] Under the express provisions of the statutes relating to the removal of causes from a state court to a federal court,[51] a valid injunction granted by the state court before the removal remains in force thereafter until it is dissolved,[52] even though it is one which the federal court could not originally have granted,[53] except, it has been held, an injunction granted before the filing of the bill in the state court.[54]

Dissolution of injunction. The federal court, after removal, may dissolve an injunction previously granted by the state court, in a case where such dissolution is proper,[55] and a motion in the federal court for a dissolution is the proper remedy in such case.[56] An injunction will not be dissolved, however, merely because the bill was not verified, in accordance with the practice in the federal court, if it was sufficient under the state practice,[57] nor because plaintiff failed to prosecute his application to continue the injunction on the day fixed by the state court;[58] and the question of dissolving or continuing the injunction is not affected by the fact that it is one which could not originally have been granted by the federal court.[59] The hearing of a motion to dissolve an injunction should not be postponed because of the pendency of a motion to remand the cause.[60]

[§ 284] 4. Receiverships. A receiver appointed by a state court remains in possession and in office after the removal of the cause to a federal court,[61] and may be required to account in the federal court,[62] whose officer he becomes by the removal.[63] The federal court may remove or discharge a receiver appointed by the state court before removal;[64] but where a motion for a discharge had been made to and denied by the state court prior to the removal, the federal court should not thereafter grant a similar application without any additional evidence or showing,[65] in view of the rule that orders and decisions of the state court will be treated by the federal court as conclusive to the same extent as if the cause had remained in the state court.[66]

[§ 285] 5. Contempt Proceedings. While the pendency in a state court of contempt proceedings founded upon the violation of an order of such court, in a cause pending therein, does not preclude or delay the removal of the cause to a federal court,[67] the court to which the cause is removed has no authority to hear or determine such proceedings or to punish a party for such contempt committed before the removal,[68] and the state court retains jurisdiction for such purpose.[69] Where, however, prior to the removal the state court has determined contempt proceedings and entered an order therein, the federal court to which the principal cause is thereafter removed will recognize and enforce such order,[70] except that where an appeal from such order has been taken to the state supreme court, the federal court will hold proceedings for the enforcement of the order in abeyance pending the disposition of the appeal.[71]

[§ 286] 6. Depositions. A federal court to which a cause has been removed from a state court is without power to compel a witness to sign a deposition recording testimony given by him before the removal,[72] or to compel a defendant to file answers to interrogatories annexed to the petition or complaint,[73] or to submit to examination before trial,[74] under the state practice. Depositions which have been duly taken and signed before removal, however, under the state law or an order of the state court, and which would have been admissible in the state court if the cause had remained there, may be used as evidence in the federal court after the removal.[75]

[§ 287] 7. Motions pending and Undetermined. Where a cause is removed from a state court to a federal court while a motion theretofore made is pending, such motion is transferred with the record to the federal court, to be there determined;[76] and where a referee has been directed to hear and report evidence, and has made his report before the removal, such report is before the federal court for consideration in passing upon the motion.[77]

[§ 288] H. Service or Perfection of Process or Notices[78]—1. In General. It is provided by statute that in cases removed from a state court to a federal court in which any defendant has not been served with process or in which service has not been perfected prior to removal, or in which the process served proves to be defective, such process may be completed by the federal court through its officers, or new process as to defendants upon whom service has not been completed may be issued out of such court, or service may be perfected in such court in the same manner as in cases which are originally brought in the federal courts; but it is further provided that nothing in such provisions shall be construed to deprive any defendant upon whom process is so served after removal of his right to move to remand the cause to the state court, the same as if process had been served upon him before removal.[79] Accordingly, a cause should not be dismissed because the service upon a defendant was ineffective, but new process should be issued and the cause retained by the federal court.[80]

[§ 289] 2. Reservice or Refiling. Where substituted service of process in a cause commenced in a state court was made before removal, plaintiff is not required to obtain from the federal court to which the cause is subsequently removed an order authorizing such mode of service,[81] and a notice served or filed while the cause was pending in the state court is not required, after the removal, to be re-served or refiled in the cause,[82] in view of the rule that the federal court takes up the case at the point at which the state court leaves off.[83]

[83] See supra § 275.

[84] Amendment of removal papers:
Bond see supra § 247.
Petition see supra § 244.

A federal court to which a cause has been removed from a state court has the power and is under a duty to permit such amendments of the process and pleadings in the cause as would be permissible under the state statutes, provided they do not offend the federal laws or the rules established by decisions of the federal courts;[85] and it is no ground for refusing an amendment that if it had been made in the state court it would have prevented the removal of the cause.[86] So plaintiff may be permitted to amend his declaration or complaint by adding new counts for the same cause of action as that set out in the original counts,[87] and an action at law may be changed into a suit in equity upon the same cause, or vice versa.[88] Similarly, a bill or complaint not stating facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action may be amended by setting out such facts;[89] but if it did not state a case within the jurisdiction of the state court it cannot be amended after removal.[90] Where the facts necessary to confer jurisdiction upon the federal court appear in the removal papers, the pleadings in the cause may be amended to make such facts appear upon their face.[91]

[§ 291] J. Counterclaims, Set-Offs, and Cross Bills.[92] Where defendant has the right, under the laws of the state from the courts of which a cause has been removed to a federal court, to plead a counterclaim or set-off in the same action, he may do so in the federal court to which the cause has been removed.[93] The filing of a cross bill after removal is not precluded by the fact that the cause therein set up could not have been begun in the federal court as an original suit.[94] A cross bill or cross complaint setting up a cause which is properly within the jurisdiction of the federal court cures any defect in its jurisdiction as based upon plaintiff's bill or complaint.[95]

[§ 292] K. Security for Costs.[96] In view of the general rule that a cause removed from a state court to a federal court shall proceed in the latter court in the same manner as if it had originally been commenced therein,[97] a cause so removed is subject to a rule of the federal court requiring plaintiff in every case brought in such court, to give security for costs if demand therefor is made, even though if the cause had remained in the state court such security would not have been required.[98]

[§ 293] L. Granting or Continuing Injunction.[99] A federal court to which a cause has been removed from a state court has power to grant an injunction in a proper case;[1] and so it may continue an injunction granted by the state court before removal.[2] An order of the federal court granting or continuing an injunction is equivalent to a denial of a motion to vacate the injunction granted by the state court.[3]

[§ 294] M. Dismissal or Discontinuance[4]—1. On Motion of Plaintiff. Plaintiff in a cause removed from a state court to a federal court ordinarily may discontinue or dismiss his action at any time while the cause is pending in the federal court,[5] upon application made to such court,[6] and defendant cannot prevent a dismissal by applying for leave to file a plea of set-off after the motion to dismiss has been made;[7] but under the rule that a plaintiff's right so to do is not absolute but is within the court's discretion,[8] it has been held that he should not be allowed to dismiss or discontinue his action without prejudice merely in order that he may bring in the state court another action against defendant on the same cause but for an amount insufficient to render the action removable.[9] An attempted dismissal or discontinuance by plaintiff is ineffectual, however, where it is subsequently determined that the federal court was without jurisdiction at the time of the removal,[10] and the cause remains pending in the state court notwithstanding the attempt to dismiss or discontinue it.[11]

Dismissal in state court after removal see supra § 266.

[§ 295] 2. Involuntary Dismissal.[12] A cause previously removed from a state court to a federal court should not be dismissed by such court because its jurisdiction is lacking or has ceased to exist,[13] but should be remanded to the state court,[14] unless it also is without jurisdiction of the cause, in which case the suit should be dismissed[15] without prejudice.[16] A contention that the controversy has become moot will not be determined upon a motion by defendant to dismiss the cause.[17] A cause may be dismissed if plaintiff fails to prosecute it or proceed with it after removal;[18] and, especially in view of the statute so providing,[19] where the federal court has entered an order requiring plaintiff to plead or file a copy of the paper or pleading by which the suit or proceeding was commenced, it may dismiss such suit or proceeding if he fails to comply with such order.[20]

[§ 296] N. Consolidation of Causes. Subject to the usual rules governing the consolidation of actions,[21] a cause removed from a state court to a federal court may be consolidated, in the latter court, with a cause originally brought and pending therein.[22]

[§ 297] O. Evidence Admissible under Pleadings. All evidence is admissible under the pleadings in a cause removed from a state court to a federal court which would have been admissible in the state court under the same pleadings if the cause had not been removed.[23]

[§ 298] P. Trial and Determination. All questions arising in a cause after its removal from a state court to a federal court are to be tried and determined by the federal court according to its own modes of proceeding;[24] but all substantial rights of the parties must be given full recognition.[25]

Bank v. Brown, 17 Fed. 161, 4 Woods 263 (holding that, where the proceedings for removal were insufficient to divest the jurisdiction of the state court or confer jurisdiction upon the federal court, the cause has in law never been removed, and therefore the federal court cannot remand it, but can only dismiss all proceedings had therein).

Procedure after removal in general see supra § 275.

Time for trial. The time for the trial of a cause removed from a state court to a federal court is, as nearly as may be, the same as that established by the state law and practice in causes tried in the state courts,[26] in view of the statutes providing for conformity of proceedings in the federal court with the state practice[27] and the rule requiring a cause after removal to proceed in the federal court as if originally commenced therein.[28] Subject to the principle stated, the term at which a cause so removed should stand for trial depends upon the rules[29] or practice[30] of the particular district court to which removal is taken.[31]

Trial by jury. Plaintiff is entitled to a trial of his cause by jury, after removal to the federal court, if he would have been so entitled in the state court;[32] and a failure, within the time required by the state statute, to demand a jury trial before the removal, which delay by the state law amounts to a waiver of the right to trial by jury, does not affect the right to trial by jury in the federal court.[33]

Determination and disposition. A federal court in a cause removed thereto, as well as in a cause originally brought therein,[34] is under a duty to enforce rights conferred by a state statute;[35] but in the absence of statute a federal court of equity is ordinarily at full liberty to exercise its independent judgment, uncontrolled by decisions of the state courts.[36] Where a matter of fact, although vital to the merits of the cause, was necessarily determined by the court before trial in passing upon its own jurisdiction, it is determined for all the purposes of the case and is not open for redetermination.[37] The removal cannot deprive a party of any substantial right;[38] so the rights of the parties must be adjudicated in accordance with the same law which would have determined them in the state court,[39] and the federal court is in duty bound to administer the same relief that could properly have been granted in the state court if the cause had remained there.[40]

In criminal prosecution removed to a federal court,[41] the state prosecuting officer is the proper person to prosecute the case,[42] and where defendant is a federal officer the United States district attorney may properly act as counsel for him,[43] although that is not obligatory[44] except where made so by statute.[45] The accused is called upon to answer to the offense as defined by the laws of the state by which the prosecution was instituted, and not as defined by a federal statute,[46] and in substantive matters the state practice should be followed, at least in felony cases.[47] If the state fails or refuses to prosecute the cause after removal, the federal court should impanel a jury and direct a verdict of not guilty.[48] If the indictment is quashed in the federal court, it has no jurisdiction to find a new indictment against defendant,[49] but it may remand him to the custody of the state court for further proceedings against him.[50] In case of conviction, it seems clear that the sentence pronounced or punishment inflicted should be that prescribed by the state law.[51]

[§ 299] Q. Judgment and Execution. A judgment rendered by a federal court in a cause previously removed thereto from a state court is not absolutely void merely because of an insufficiency of the allegations of the petition for removal, so long as it is not reversed, set aside, or otherwise impugned by competent judicial authority.[52] Interest on a judgment is properly allowed for the period during which its enforcement is stayed pending a motion for new trial.[53] In a suit commenced by attachment against a nonresident defendant, the federal court's judgment may be enforced against the attached property in the same manner as if the cause had remained in the state court;[54] but the time at which execution can issue depends upon the law of the United States and not that of the state from the courts of which the cause was removed.[55]

[§ 300] R. Enforcement of Sentence in Criminal Prosecution.[56] Where defendant in a criminal prosecution removed from a state court to a federal court[57] is convicted therein, it has been held that the state from the courts of which the cause was removed, rather than the federal government, should execute the sentence, inasmuch as the conviction is of an offense against the state law.[58] If the sentence be that defendant be executed, the court should direct that he be delivered to the sheriff of the county from whence the case came, for enforcement of the sentence;[59] and if the sentence be imprisonment the marshal of the court should be directed to deliver defendant to the sheriff for transportation to jail or to the state penitentiary, as the case may be.[60] Where a fine is imposed and is not paid, defendant should be delivered to the sheriff of the proper county for imprisonment;[61] but if the fine is paid forthwith, the clerk of the federal court should receive it and pay it over to the clerk of the state court from which the prosecution was removed,[62] reserving, however, so much of the sum paid as represents the costs in the federal court, if costs have been adjudged against defendant.[63] If the state authorities should decline to receive a convict directed by the federal court to be delivered to them, the marshal should be ordered to liberate him.[64]

[§ 301] S. Costs.[65] In accordance with the general rules governing the award of costs in suits in the federal courts,[66] the right to costs upon the final determination by a federal court of a cause previously removed thereto from a state court depends upon the state statutes and practice, unless a federal statute is applicable.[67] Thus where plaintiff's recovery is so small that under the law of the state he is not entitled to have costs awarded to him, they will not be taxed in his favor by the federal court;[68] and on the other hand costs will not be awarded in such case to defendant, since the statutes of the United States do not recognize, but by implication deny, the right of the losing party to costs.[69] E converso, although plaintiff recovers a sum so small that in an action originally brought in the federal court he would not be entitled to costs, they should nevertheless be awarded to him if, in the state court, had the cause remained there, he would have been entitled thereto.[70]

Costs accrued prior to removal.[71] It appears to be the more generally accepted rule that, if costs are awarded by the federal court, all costs accrued in the state court and under the state law before the removal of the cause to the federal court should be included in the award,[72] the acts of congress prescribing what costs may or may not be taxed being deemed to apply only to such costs as accrue in the federal court after removal;[73] but there is some authority, to the contrary, that items of costs accrued in the state courts are not to be taxed by the federal court unless they are such as would be taxable by it had they accrued therein.[74]

Costs accruing in state court after removal, in proceedings improperly taken therein,[75] will not be taxed by the federal court.[76]

XVI. REMAND

[By Eustace W. Tomlinson]

[§ 302] A. Necessity or Propriety.[77]—1. Remand of Entire Cause—a. In General. Under the provision of the statute that if, in any suit removed from a state court to a federal court, it shall appear to the satisfaction of the federal court at any time after the removal that such suit does not really and substantially involve a dispute or controversy properly within the jurisdiction of such court, or that the parties to the suit have been improperly joined, either as plaintiffs or defendants, for the purpose of creating a removable cause, the federal court shall proceed no further but shall dismiss the suit or remand it to the court from which it was removed, as justice may require,[78] a remand is necessary and proper where the jurisdiction of the federal court was wanting at the time of the removal,[79] or where, in consequence of proceedings had in the federal court after the removal, its jurisdiction has ceased to exist.[80]

Effect of consolidation with pending suit. The consolidation of a suit, after its removal, with another suit pending in the federal court does not affect the power and duty of such court to remand the removed cause upon determining that a remand is necessary or proper.[81]

Appeal from ruling on application to restrain further proceedings in state court does not affect the right of the federal court to remand the cause.[82]

[§ 303] b. Want of Jurisdiction at Time of Removal[83]—(1) Cause Not within Removal Statutes.[84] A cause removed from a state court to a federal court should be remanded to the court from whence it came if the facts of the cause do not bring it within the provisions of the statutes authorizing removal,[85] or if the jurisdictional facts do not appear from the removal papers and the record of the cause as it was at the time the removal was effected.[86]

Suit partially unremovable. Where a suit in which are joined prayers for an injunction and for a judgment for damages is not removable as to the former because the relief sought is merely ancillary to a prior action which was not removable,[87] the whole cause must be remanded even though as to the action for damages it would have been removable.[88] However, where proceedings to punish a party for contempt of the state court had been instituted therein before the removal, the federal court may retain the principal cause, if proper, but should remand the contempt proceedings to the state court, which alone has power to dispose of them.[89]

Existence of different ground for removal. While a petition for removal which on its face fails to show a right to remove the cause on the ground therein specified will not support a removal on another and different ground,[90] where the petition, considered with the record, is sufficient on its face to show a right to remove on the ground assigned, a subsequent showing or determination that such ground does not in fact exist will not necessitate the remand of the cause if on the face of the record or from the evidence adduced it appears that another ground of federal jurisdiction, on account of which the cause might have been removed, does exist;[91] but a removing defendant cannot be permitted to abandon the ground upon which he relied for removal and assert an inconsitent case, as against a motion to remand the cause.[92]

[§ 304] (2) Failure To Comply with Statutory Procedure for Removal.[93] Since the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court can be effected only by compliance with the procedure prescribed by statute,[94] a failure to comply therewith in a material respect necessitates the remand of a cause colorably removed.[95] Where there are no jurisdictional objections, however, to the removal and retention of the cause,[96] a remand is not made necessary by mere irregularities in the removal proceedings which can be remedied or which have worked no hardship upon the adverse party,[97] as by the fact that the petition for removal was not verified[98] or its verification is insufficient,[99] or that the removal bond is defectively executed,[1] or the sureties on the bond are insufficient,[2] or by a defect in the form of the bond,[3] or by an omission from, or defect in, the transcript of the record of the state court.[4]

[§ 305] (3) Late Removal or Filing of Transcript.[5] Where proceedings to effect the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court were not taken at or within the time prescribed by statute,[6] the cause should be remanded.[7] The remand of a cause, however, on account of a failure to perfect the removal by filing a transcript of the record of the state court at the proper time[8] is a matter within the discretion of the court,[9] and it may refuse to remand the cause on that ground,[10] since it has power to excuse the delay or to permit the transcript to be filed at a later time.[11]

[§ 306] (4) Removal to Improper District or Division.[12] When a cause commenced in a state court has been removed therefrom to a federal court of an improper district,[13] or to an improper division of the proper district court,[14] it should be remanded.

[§ 307] (5) Removal after Waiver of Right. Where the right of a party to remove a cause from a state court to a federal court had been waived by him prior to the time he undertook to effect the removal,[15] the cause should be remanded.[16]

[a] Thus (1) where in a cause removed to a federal court on the ground of diversity of citizenship, it is shown by the record that the cause arises under a statute of the United States, the fact that the citizenship is not diverse will not necessitate a remand, but the court may retain the suit, in view of the federal question. (2) Although the petition for the removal of a cause alleged that plaintiff was a citizen of a different state from that of which defendant is a citizen, the fact that evidence produced in the federal court shows that plaintiff is an alien does not compel the remand of the cause, since the federal court has jurisdiction under either circumstance. [§ 308] c. Acts and Proceedings after Removal[17]—(1) Disposition of Federal Question. A cause removed from a state court to a federal court because it arose under the constitution or a law or treaty of the United States should be remanded when the only federal question has been separately disposed of upon a demurrer[18] or eliminated by amendment of the pleadings,[19] and other questions remain in the case for decision.

[§ 309] (2) Dismissal or Discontinuance as To Removing Defendant. When a cause has been removed from a state court to a federal court by less than the whole number of defendants, as on account of local prejudice or influence affecting the removing defendants[20] or the existence of a separable controversy as to them,[21] a dismissal,[22] settlement,[23] or discontinuance[24] of the cause in the federal court as to such removing defendants, or an amendment of plaintiff's pleadings which leaves nothing in the suit affecting their rights,[25] renders a remand necessary and proper, since the cause is no longer one properly within the jurisdiction of the federal court.

[§ 310] (3) Reduction of Amount in Controversy. Although a cause removed from a state court to a federal court is one in which the sum or value in controversy is material to the right of removal,[26] a reduction of such sum or value, after the removal, to an amount not exceeding that specified by the statute will not justify a remand,[27] unless it is clearly shown that the amount shown by the pleadings to be in controversy before such reduction was excessive as the result of fraud or mistake.[28] So, an adjudication sustaining a set-off, counterclaim, or partial defense, so as to reduce the sum recoverable below the statutory amount, is no reason for remanding the cause, provided it does not appear that the original demand was exaggerated in bad faith.[29] Similarly, in a suit praying damages in a sum less than the jurisdictional amount and an injunction, the dismissal of the cause of action for injunction has been held not to justify a remand, in the absence of bad faith in the joinder;[30] but it has been held that where a cause of action for an amount in excess of that specified by statute has been joined in the same suit with another cause involving an amount less than that so specified, and a demurrer to the former cause is sustained, the suit must be remanded.[31]

[§ 311] (4) Appeal from Order of Removal.[32] The taking or perfection of an appeal from the order of a state court authorizing or directing the removal of a cause from such court to a federal court does not make the remand of such cause by the federal court necessary or proper.[33]

[§ 312] (5) Joinder of New Parties. After the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court, the induction into the suit, whether by amendment of the pleadings,[34] by the filing of a cross bill,[35] or by intervention,[36] of new and additional parties, either plaintiffs or defendants, ordinarily does not necessitate or justify a remand of the cause, even though the citizenship of such new parties is the same as that of an adverse party, in a cause removed on the ground of difference of citizenship,[37] or their claims do not exceed the jurisdictional sum, in a cause in which the amount or value in controversy is material,[38] and even though they file cross bills against others of the parties and strangers to the suit, necessitating bringing in the latter also as parties.[39] Where, however, such new and additional parties were indispensable to the suit as originally commenced, and were not joined thereon, it should be remanded after they have been brought in if, with them as parties, the jurisdiction of the federal court does not then properly exist.[40]

[§ 314] (7) Interposition of Defense Not Cognizable in State Court. While a federal court cannot acquire jurisdiction, by removal from a state court, of a cause not within the jurisdiction of the court from which it was removed,[47] and must dismiss it if removal is effectuated,[48] the fact that, after the removal of a cause which was within the jurisdiction of the state court, defendant interposes a defense of which such state court could not have taken cognizance does not prevent the retention of the cause by the federal court.[49]

[§ 315] (8) Quashal of Indictment in Criminal Prosecution. If the indictment in a criminal prosecution removed from a state court to a federal court[50] is quashed by the federal court after the removal,[51] the prosecution should be remanded.[52]

[§ 316] (9) Change of Citizenship. Where a cause has been removed from a state court to a federal court on the ground of a difference of citizenship between the parties,[53] a subsequent change of citizenship so that the requisite difference no longer exists,[54] including the change effected by the consolidation of a foreign corporation with a domestic one,[55] does not render the remand of the cause necessary or proper.

al of a cause from a state court to a federal court, all the property of defendant is placed in the hands of a receiver appointed by the state court in a proceeding brought for that purpose, so that any judgment rendered in the federal court would have to be referred to the state court for payment and a conflict of jurisdiction might arise from the retention of the cause by the federal court, it should be remanded.[56]

[§ 318] (11) Amendment of Removal Statutes. Where a cause duly removed from a state court to a federal court was within the jurisdiction of the federal court under the removal statutes as they stood at the time of the removal, a remand is not necessitated by a change in the statutes, subsequently effective, under which the cause would not be removable.[57]

[§ 319] d. Consent of Parties as Authorizing Remand. After the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court, and the divestment of the state court's jurisdiction,[58] a remand of the cause cannot be necessitated or justified by the mere consent or agreement of the parties,[59] and their joinder in a motion for a remand will not authorize the court to order it.[60]

[§ 320] e. Waiver of Grounds for Remand. Since the right to remove a cause from a state court to a federal court, and the jurisdiction of the federal court on such removal, cannot be created or conferred by consent,[61] the right to have a remand of a cause on the ground that it was not removable and that the federal jurisdiction thereof is wanting cannot be waived,[62] although acquiescence in the removal may strengthen inferences from the record of the existence of the facts necessary to confer jurisdiction.[63] So an appearance in or other apparent submission or consent to the jurisdiction of the federal court,[64] or failure to appeal from an order refusing a remand,[65] does not waive the right to have the cause remanded if the jurisdiction of the court is lacking. Where there is no jurisdictional objection, however, to the removal of the cause, the right to move to remand it because of irregularities in the removal proceedings may be lost by waiver, acquiescence, or consent.[66] Thus the interposition of a motion to remand merely on jurisdictional grounds,[67] or delay or laches in moving to remand,[68] provided it is such as might reasonably be said to estop plaintiff from denying that he has consented to the federal jurisdiction,[69] or other acts inconsistent with an intention to object to the removal or to move for a remand,[70] such as answering,[71] joining in making up issues,[72] or other further proceedings[73] in the cause on its merits, noting it for trial,[74] or engaging in a trial,[75] constitute a waiver of irregularities in the removal proceedings not amounting to a defect in the jurisdiction, and bar the right to move thereafter for a remand on account thereof,[76] unless such acts are done under an express agreement or stipulation that they shall not effect such waiver.[77] A special appearance in the federal court for the sole purpose of moving for a remand is not, however, a waiver of any of plaintiff's rights;[78] and a failure to object in the state court to the regularity of the removal proceedings does not waive the right to move in the federal court to remand the cause.[79]

[§ 321] 2. Severance of Cause and Remand of Part[80]—a. Cause Removed on Account of Prejudice or Local Influence.[81] Under the express provisions of the statute permitting the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court by any defendant when it shall be made to appear that on account of prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in the state court,[82] a cause so removed may be severed, and remanded so far as it relates to the defendant or defendants other than the one by whom the removal was effected, if it further appears that the suit can be fully and justly determined as to them in the state court, without being affected by such prejudice or local influence, and that no party will be prejudiced by a separation of the parties.[83] The cause cannot be remanded as to such other defendants, however, if a trial as to them will be affected by such prejudice or local influence against the removing defendant;[84] and so if it cannot be tried without involving his acts or liability a remand is not justified.[85]

[§ 322] b. Cause Involving Separable Controversies.[86] While the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court on account of the existence in such cause of a separable controversy transfers the entire suit,[87] if such separable controversy is not so intimately related to the other controversy or controversies in the cause and the parties interested therein as to make it necessary or desirable under general legal principles to try them together, a severance, may and should be had, and such other controversy or controversies remanded to the state court,[88] in the same manner as is authorized to be done in causes removed on account of local prejudice.[89] The federal court has power, however, to retain the whole suit if full, fair, and complete trial of the removable controversy makes it necessary,[90] and the provisions of state statutes and the state constitution for a local trial must yield so far as necessary, the federal jurisdiction as established by the federal constitution taking precedence, in view of the principle that the constitution is the supreme law of the land.[91]

[§ 323] B. Remand by Court Sua Sponte. Where a cause removed from a state court to a federal court is proper to be remanded, as being a cause not within the removal statutes or not properly removed,[92] the district court to which the cause was removed,[93] or an appellate federal court to which an appeal is taken from a judgment or decree rendered in the cause by the district court,[94] has the power and is under a duty to remand the cause, on its own motion, although no motion for a remand is made by a party,[95] or even where a motion founded upon the same ground has theretofore been denied,[96] or been withdrawn by the maker;[97] and to the end that it may determine its own jurisdiction, if it has reason to doubt the existence of the necessary facts, the court may examine the parties,[98] or direct a plea in abatement to be filed and heard.[99] Similarly, the trial court may, on its own motion, remand a cause which was removed too late.[1] The court will not, however, without a motion by a party, remand a cause on account of a defect or irregularity which is nonjurisdictional, or is capable of being or has been waived.[2]

[§ 324] C. Procedure To Procure Remand—1. By Motion—a. In General. The ordinary and proper mode of procuring the remand of a cause previously removed from a state court to a federal court, or testing the propriety of the removal and the jurisdiction of the court, is by motion to remand,[3] which in the usual case is an adequate remedy and so precludes the issuance of a writ of mandamus to compel the remand.[4] A plea to the jurisdiction may be treated as a motion to remand,[5] in view of the rule necessitating a remand whenever a want of jurisdiction appears.[6]

Sufficiency of motion. A motion to remand is not insufficient because it fails to state specifically the grounds upon which it is made, if it clearly raises the question of the jurisdiction of the federal court and signifies the unwillingness of the movant to submit thereto.[7]

[§ 325] b. Who May Move for Remand. Inasmuch as a federal court to which a cause has been removed from a state court has the power and is under a duty to remand the cause on its own motion when it appears that its jurisdiction thereof is lacking,[8] it has been held that even the defendant at whose instance a suit was removed may move to remand it for want of jurisdiction,[9] or on appeal or by writ of error may procure a reversal on account thereof;[10] but there is authority, to the contrary, that a defendant who by seeking removal has asserted or consented to the federal court's jurisdiction cannot be heard, by motion to remand, to say that the action is one of which such court has no jurisdiction,[11] unless the court from which it was removed was also without jurisdiction.[12] A motion to remand on the ground that the cause was not removed at or within the time prescribed by statute[13] cannot be made by the defendant who effected the removal.[14] A trustee in bankruptcy appointed by the same court to which a cause is removed is not for that reason precluded from moving to remand the cause.[15]

[§ 326] c. Time of Motion. As a general rule, where a cause has been removed from a state court to a federal court, a motion to remand it on account of want of jurisdiction[16] may be made at any time during the pendency of the cause,[17] and the adverse party to the suit cannot complain of mere delay in moving for a remand on any ground without showing that prejudice to him has resulted therefrom.[18] It has been held that where a transcript of the record of the state court has been filed in the federal court,[19] the fact that the day by which it was required to be filed therein has not arrived, or the time within which such filing might have been made has not expired, does not prevent a party from moving to remand on the ground that the cause was not one authorized by statute to be removed;[20] but there is some authority to the contrary.[21]

Where suit has abated, as by reason of the death of a party, a motion to remand cannot be made so long as it continues in abatement.[22]

After verdict or judgment. In several cases motions to remand made after verdict[23] or after judgment[24] have been sustained; but the propriety of moving at such times was not discussed therein, and the point seems never to have been expressly decided.

Upon appeal from a judgment rendered by the federal district court, it is too late to move for the first time to remand the cause on a ground not involving entire want of jurisdiction.[25]

[§ 327] d. Second Motion To Remand.[26] Although a motion to remand a cause from a federal court to the state court from which it had theretofore been removed has once been made and denied, a second motion to remand may be made when founded upon facts which have arisen or appeared since the previous motion was made,[27] or facts which were not presented by or in connection with the previous motion,[28] or, it seems, where the previous motion was denied as premature,[29] provided the ground on which the motion is based has not been waived.[30] Moreover, a motion to remand on account of a want of jurisdiction appearing on the face of the record may be made at any time notwithstanding the fact that a previous motion on the same ground has been overruled,[31] since the court's jurisdiction is always open to challenge[32] and a remand would be ordered by the court sua sponte whenever a want of jurisdiction should appear even though neither party applied therefor;[33] and the order denying the previous motion is not to be regarded as the law of the case so as to prevent the court from reconsidering the question.[34]

[§ 328] e. Issues of Fact[35]—(1) In General. No issue of fact upon a petition for the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court or upon the record of such cause is raised by a motion to remand it to the state court,[36] since such motion is in effect a demurrer to the removal petition,[37] admitting the truth of its allegations for the purpose of the motion,[38] and only challenging the face of the record.[39] Plaintiff is, however, entitled to put in issue the allegations upon which the removal was effected, for the purpose of showing that by reason of their untruth or the nonexistence of jurisdictional facts the cause should be remanded;[40] and the proper mode of raising such an issue is by a plea to the jurisdiction of the federal court,[41] or by an answer to the petition for removal,[42] although it has been said to be the practice in at least one district to treat an allegation, in a petition for removal, of fraudulent misjoinder of parties for the purpose of preventing removal[43] as traversed, without express denial, when a motion to remand the cause is made.[44]

But see Jones v. Casey-Hedges Co., 213 Fed. 43 (where it was said that if the motion to remand does not expressly or by necessary inference raise an issue upon the jurisdictional facts, as where it is a general motion without any statement of grounds or where the ground on which it is based is in effect merely a demurrer to the petition for removal, such motion is not sufficient to raise an issue of fact; but that if the motion expressly denies the averments of the removal petition, or is based on a ground which in effect traverses or negatives such averments, or is supported by an affidavit which constitutes a denial of such averments, the motion is sufficient to Form and sufficiency of pleading. A formal plea or answer is not indispensable, in order to raise an issue of fact as to the jurisdiction of the federal court, provided a traverse in some form is made,[45] and even a denial embodied in a motion to remand has been treated as a traverse of the allegation in the removal petition so denied.[46] So a plea or answer is not to be tested by technical rules,[47] but ordinarily is sufficient if it sets out fairly and with reasonable certainty matters of fact which, if true, negative the jurisdiction of the federal court.[48] But a petition for removal founded upon prejudice or local influence is not sufficiently traversed by a mere denial of the pleader's belief in the existence of such prejudice or influence;[49] and a plea alleging that if the federal court has jurisdiction it ought not to exercise it because the cause could be tried with greater convenience in the state court is insufficient.[50] An averment in the plea that a party is a citizen of a specified state is not neutralized by the admission therein that such party resides abroad.[51]

do not apply in removal cases,[53] but, in harmony with the rule that a cause may be remanded at any time when want of jurisdiction appears,[54] the plea may ordinarily be filed at any stage of the proceedings.[55] It is, however, within the discretion of the court whether or not to permit the filing of a plea or answer to a petition for removal when a considerable time has elapsed since the removal and the cause is ready for trial on the merits.[56]

[§ 329] (2) Trial.[57] The issue of fact raised by a plea or answer controverting the allegations of a petition for the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court[58] is, broadly speaking, to be tried and heard in such manner as the court may direct,[59] and proper practice requires that preliminary application be made to the court to fix the procedure to be followed.[60] Ordinarily, the issue should be tried by a jury,[61] subject to the right of the court to direct a verdict where proper;[62] but if the issue is not raised until too late to have it tried by the jury, the court can pass upon the evidence.[63] It has been held that the issue as to jurisdiction should be tried in advance of the trial upon the merits;[64] but, especially in view of practical considerations respecting two trials in the same cause, other authorities have held that both issues may be tried at the same time.[65]

[§ 330] (3) Evidence—(a) In General. In the trial of an issue of fact arising upon plea or answer to a petition for the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court, filed for the sake of showing the untruth of its allegations or the nonexistence of the facts necessary to render the cause removable and to confer jurisdiction on the federal court, the usual rules of evidence ordinarily apply.[66] No evidence is admissible in behalf of the removing party for which a proper foundation has not been laid by proper allegations in the petition for removal.[67]

Burden of proof.[68] Where the allegations of a petition for removal are denied or put in issue, the burden is upon petitioner to prove them;[69] and it has accordingly been said that doubts are to be resolved in favor of plaintiff.[70] So, mere inference from the evidence offered is not sufficient to overcome positive allegations of plaintiff's bill or complaint.[71] Defendant may, however, be given the opportunity to present additional proof where that originally adduced is not sufficient to sustain the burden upon him.[72]

Affidavits or oral testimony. Oral testimony may be taken by the court on the facts in issue,[73] or affidavits may be received as evidence of the facts,[74] except in controversion of the showing made by the transcript of the record of the state court.[75] Positive averments of fact made by an affidavit, when it is so received as evidence, are sufficient to support a finding;[76] but an affidavit made merely on information and belief, which fails to disclose the source of the information and states mere general conclusions, cannot overcome positive allegations of a petition for removal.[77]

Admissions made by a party in prior proceedings in the cause may be given in evidence by the other party in support of or opposition to the motion to remand;[78] but such admissions, or statements contrary to the position assumed by the party at the time of the motion to remand, do not work an estoppel against him.[79]

Pleadings in state court. Where the issue is as to the propriety of the time at which the removal was effected, pleadings filed in the state court may be used as evidence of the state of the proceedings in such court at the time of removal,[80] even though such pleadings had been withdrawn by stipulation.[81]

Judicial notice. In the trial of an issue of fact in connection with a motion to remand, the usual rules as to judicial notice apply.[82] Thus the court will take judicial notice that one of the parties is a receiver appointed by it;[83] and it will judicially notice state statutes,[84] but not rules of the state court.[85]

[§ 331] (b) As to Inaccuracy or Incorrectness of Transcript. Parol evidence is admissible, on the trial of an issue of fact duly raised by plea or answer to a petition for the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court, to show that the transcript of the record of the cause in such state court is inaccurate or erroneous;[86] but such transcript cannot be controverted by mere ex parte affidavits.[87]

[§ 332] (4) Finding or Verdict.[88] If, upon the trial of an issue of fact as to the jurisdiction of the federal court in a cause removed thereto from a state court, or as to the removability of such cause, it is found from the evidence that the cause is not such as properly to be cognizable by the federal court under the removal statutes, it becomes the duty of such court to remand it to the state court.[89]

[§ 333] f. Hearing and Determination of Motion.[90] When the allegations of a petition for the removal of a cause from a state court to a federal court, or of affidavits filed therewith and in support thereof, have not been challenged or put in issue, in connection with, or for the purposes of, a motion to remand the cause,[91] the only question for determination is whether, as a matter of law, upon the facts stated, taken in connection with the record of the cause, the federal court has jurisdiction,[92] which question includes the determination of the sufficiency of the petition for removal[93] and of the timeliness of the removal proceedings.[94] The petitioner need not adduce any evidence to sustain such allegations,[95] and they must be taken by the court as true,[96] except where the petitioning defendant admits the falsity or incorrectness of an allegation, in which case his petition may be treated as amended accordingly.[97] Mere conclusions of law, however, embodied in the removal petition are not to be regarded as true and, of course, are not conclusive upon the court.[98] In considering the motion to remand, the court will not pass upon the merits of the cause of action[99] or the sufficiency of the pleadings;[1] but for the purpose of determining its own jurisdiction, and the necessity or propriety of remanding the cause, the court may examine and consider the entire record,[2] including the presence vel non of particular parties in the cause as of the time the removal was effected,[3] and so when fraudulent joinder of a party to prevent removal,[4] or the existence of a federal question,[5] was alleged by the removal petition, or when such petition denied, in an action by an employee against a common carrier for personal injuries, that plaintiff was engaged in interstate commerce,[6] the court will examine the merits sufficiently to determine the question, so that it may pass upon the motion. Where the removal was effected before plaintiff's declaration or complaint had been filed in the state court,[7] plaintiff may, for the purpose of enabling the court to pass upon his motion to remand, exhibit a copy of the declaration or complaint filed, properly authenticated by affidavit.[8]

Presumptions. In passing upon a motion to remand, the nonresidence of a party, once shown to exist, will be presumed to have continued at the time of the application to remove the cause, in the absence of any showing to the contrary;[9] and one shown to be a citizen of a designated foreign country will be presumed to be a resident thereof.[10] It will be presumed, in the absence of any contrary showing, that the petition for removal was filed within the proper time.[11]

Grant or denial of motion. It has been laid down or regarded as a general rule that, in passing upon a motion to remand, all doubts should be resolved against the jurisdiction of the federal court;[12] but [a] In Hawaii the rule is the same in the case of a motion to remand a cause removed from a territorial court to the federal court. Chock Sing v. Breckons, 3 Hawaii Fed. 630.

[b] In Porto Rico the rule is the same in the case of a motion to remand a cause removed from an insular court to the federal court. Alonso v. Oben, 13 Porto Rico Fed. 237; Wenar v. Pohl, 1 Porto Rico Fed. 37. But see Valdes v. Pettingill, 4 such rule is not universally recognized or followed,[13] and the view of the courts at the present time appears rather to be that any such doubt should be resolved in favor of the right to remove, and against a remand, inasmuch as a party has no remedy by way of appeal if the cause is remanded.[14] The true rule, however, would seem to be that the motion shall be decided not by the existence of doubts, but by the preponderance of the facts and law and the reasons which condition them.[15] The fact that a substantial recovery could not be had, on the facts alleged, in the federal court, under the rules as to measure of damages prevailing therein, but could be had in the state court from which the cause was removed,[16] or, on the other hand, that a more liberal rule as to the measure of damages prevails in the federal court than in the state court,[17] is not material to the determination of the motion; nor is the fact that testimony taken in the federal court will be unavailing and inadmissible, as of right, in the state court if the cause is remanded.[18] Similarly, the fact that the removal was effected for purposes of delay has no bearing upon whether or not jurisdiction of the cause should be retained.[19] If, on the face of the record, facts appear which give rise to a right of removal or bring the cause within the removal statutes, the motion must be denied.[20]

Finality of ruling. A refusal by the federal court to sustain a motion to remand does not render the question of its jurisdiction res judicata so far as concerns the right and duty of the court to reëxamine the question if subsequently raised in a proper manner or to remand the cause if a want of jurisdiction subsequently appears or is found to exist;[21] but, otherwise, a decision on a motion to remand is final in the sense that it cannot be questioned collaterally, but only by appeal or writ of error.[22]

[§ 334] g. Order of Remand—(1) In General. Where a cause theretofore removed from a state court to a federal court is remanded by the latter, the proper practice is for it to enter a formal order of remand,[23] and to make return to the state court of the proceedings had in the cause in the federal court.[24] Such an order is not indispensable, however, where the remand is made on account of want of jurisdiction existing at the time of the removal,[25] since in such case the jurisdiction of the state court is to be regarded as never having been interrupted or terminated.[26] If the state court has been enjoined by the federal court from proceeding further with the cause,[27] it is proper for the court to set aside or dissolve the restraining order in connection with the remand.[28]

der.[29] Since an order of a federal court remanding a cause to the state court from which it had therefore been removed terminates the jurisdiction of such federal court in the premises,[30] it is without authority to vacate or set aside the order of remand, even during the term at which it was made.[31]

[§ 336] h. Costs.[32] The statute relating to the remand to a state court of causes theretofore removed therefrom to a federal court expressly provides that, upon remand, the federal court shall make such order as to costs as shall be just.[33]

Party liable. The party who effected the removal is liable for the costs awarded when the cause is remanded,[34] except, it would seem, where the remand is ordered on his motion;[35] and so where, on appeal from a judgment or decree rendered by the federal court, the cause is directed to be remanded to the state court on account of want of jurisdiction on the part of the trial court, the costs are properly directed to be awarded by such court against the removing party, whether he is appellant or respondent in the appellate court.[36] When less than all the defendants applied for and obtained the removal over the objection or without the consent of the others, the latter are not liable for costs.[37]

Causes heard together. Where two or more causes having different plaintiffs are heard together, and remanded, plaintiff in each case is entitled to his costs.[38]

Amount and items allowable. The costs to be awarded upon a remand are within the discretion of the federal court.[39] Statutory fees for any services performed by the clerk at the instance of plaintiff should be included.[40] The court may direct or permit the taxation of fees for plaintiff's attorney,[41] under the general statute providing therefor in causes pending in the federal courts,[42] the amount to be taxed ordinarily being held to be that taxable upon the rendition of a judgment without a jury,[43] although there is some authority for the view that the amount taxable upon the final disposition of a cause may be taxed upon remand.[44] Where two or more cases are heard together on motion to remand, and the parties plaintiff in each are different and are represented by different attorneys, the court may award the statutory fees in each case.[45]

[§ 337] 2. By Writ of Mandamus. In accordance with the general rule that judicial discretion cannot be controlled by mandamus,[46] such writ cannot properly issue to compel a federal court to which a cause has been removed from a state court to remand such cause thereto,[47] except when it clearly appears as a matter of law on the face of the record that such federal court has no jurisdiction of the cause and no other remedy is adequate.[48]

Motion to remand as adequate remedy see supra § 324.

[§ 338] D. Operation and Effect of Remand.[49] Where a federal court to which a cause has previously been removed from a state court remands the cause, its order of remand ipso facto terminates its own jurisdiction,[50] so that such court can take no further proceedings in the cause,[51] and ex proprio vigore restores jurisdiction of the cause to the state court,[52] if that jurisdiction has ever been lost.[53] An injunction theretofore granted by the federal court to restrain proceedings in the cause in the state court after removal is vacated by the remand;[54] and if an order authorizing or directing the removal of the cause was made by the state court,[55] it is vacated by the remand, and the consequent reinstatement of the cause upon the docket of the state court.[56]

[§ 339] E. Review of Order Remanding or Refusing To Remand Cause[57]—1. By Federal Courts—a. Order Remanding Cause. Under the express provisions of the removal statute that, whenever a federal court to which a cause has been removed from a state court shall decide that such cause was improperly removed, and order it to be remanded, no appeal or writ of error from the decision remanding the cause shall be allowed,[58] and also in view of the fact that it is not final, as distinguished from interlocutory, in character,[59] an order remanding a cause is conclusive and not reviewable in any court.[60] So a circuit court of appeals has no jurisdiction to review such an order of a district court;[61] and the supreme court of the United States is without jurisdiction to review immediately any such order made either by a district court[62] or by a circuit court of appeals;[63] nor can it, in reviewing the final judgment of the state court to which the cause was remanded, review the order of remand.[64] Similarly, the supreme court has no power by writ of mandamus to compel the retention or reinstatement of a cause by the district court and thereby, in effect, to review an order remanding the cause.[65]

[§ 340] b. Order Denying Motion To Remand.[66] While an order of a federal court refusing to remand to a state court a cause theretofore removed therefrom cannot be reviewed immediately by appeal or writ of error, because it is not a final order,[67] it may be reviewed by the supreme court of the United States[68] or by a circuit court of appeals[69] in connection with review of the final judgment or decree rendered in the cause. The petition for removal is an essential part of the record on such an appeal;[70] and when the denial of the motion to remand depended upon the determination of an issue of fact, it will not be reviewed unless the evidence submitted is included in the record.[71] On such review the appellate court will reverse the judgment and direct a remand if the federal jurisdiction does not appear from the record.[72]

XVII. PROCEEDINGS IN STATE COURT AFTER DISCONTINUANCE IN, OR REMAND BY, FEDERAL COURT

[By Eustace W. Tomlinson]

[§ 342] A. Discontinuance or Dismissal. Where a civil suit or action, after having been removed from a state court to a federal court, is therein voluntarily discontinued or dismissed by plaintiff,[74] or other final disposition thereof is made which is not upon the merits,[75] another suit or action between the same parties and upon the same cause may be begun in the state court from which the former action was removed, or any other court, subject, of course, to the ordinary rules as to jurisdiction of the subject-matter and of the parties,[76] and subject to statutory limitations as to time;[77] and this is true even where the amount claimed in the new action is less than that which under the statutes must be in controversy in order that a cause may be removable.[78] Similarly, where a civil prosecution has been removed to a federal court, and thereafter the indictment is quashed by such court, the state may indict defendant again for the same offense.[79] It is clear, however, that the same suit or action cannot be revived or prosecuted in the state court, since it was taken from the state court by the removal and has ceased to exist by the dismissal or discontinuance.[80]

[§ 343] B. Remand.[81] Where a cause which has been removed from a state court to a federal court is remanded by the latter,[82] the order of remand should, under the express provisions of the statute,[83] be carried into effect immediately.[84] Upon remand the state court regains, if it has ever lost,[85] complete jurisdiction of the cause,[86] and it devolves upon such court to proceed with it in the ordinary course,[87] the order of remand being conclusive on the state court.[88] A certified copy of a mandate of an appellate court affirming the federal trial court's order remanding the cause was held competent evidence in the state court of the remand.[89] It is the duty of a defendant who knows that a motion to remand the cause has previously been made to inform himself that a remand has been ordered,[90] and so his failure to plead in the state court within a proper time after the remand of the cause cannot be excused by failure of the clerk to notify him of the remand.[91]

Where remand is based upon want of jurisdiction on the part of the federal court at the time of the removal,[92] any findings and orders made by such court pending the remand are not binding, either upon the state court[93] or upon the parties to litigation,[94] except, perhaps, in so far as parties by consenting to such orders may have become bound as by contract;[95] nor, on the other hand, can any advantage of such orders be taken in the state court.[96] It is for the state court to determine what effect shall be given to pleadings filed[97] or testimony taken[98] in the federal court while the cause was pending there.[99] It has been held, however, that where plaintiff procures a remand by showing that the amount in controversy is less than the jurisdictional minimum, he is bound in all future proceedings in the cause by the limitation so placed upon his claim.[1]

Revocation of remand. It has been held by a state court that where a cause has been remanded, and the remand executed by filing the order in the state court, a revocation of such order, although made in the same term of the federal court, does not divest the jurisdiction of the state court;[2] but in the same case the federal court refused to strike the cause from its docket until the question should be finally determined by the supreme court of the United States.[3]

RENEW.[95] [§ 1] A. In General. "Renew" is not a word of art and has no legal or technical significance.[96] It has been defined variously as meaning to make again;[97] to make new again;[98] to make over, to reëstablish, or to rebuild;[99] to reëstablish;[1] to refresh, revive, or rehabilitate an expiring or declining subject;[2] restore to freshness;[3] to restore to fullness or sufficiency;[4] to restore to vigor;[5] to revive or restore to existence.[6] It signifies to make over; to make anew; to give new life to; to restore; to recreate; to rebuild.[7] But it is not appropriate to describe the making of a new contract, or the creation of a new existence.[8] It may be employed as synonymous with "repair."[9] Specifically, to continue in force for a fresh period;[10] to grant or obtain an extension;[11] to substitute for an old obligation a new one of the same nature.[12]

Phrases: "Create, renew, or extend the charter,"[13] "privilege to renew,"[14] "renew a charter,"[15] "renew or repair any pavement,"[16] "renew policy,"[17] "renew the contract,"[18] "renew the same from time to time,"[19] and "repair and renew."[20]

[§ 2] B. Renewed. A term applied to an obligation on which the time of payment has been extended.[21] The term is used and employed as meaning or referring to the imparting continued or new force and effect.[22]

Phrases: "Issued or renewed,"[23] and "made or renewed."[24]

RENEWABLE. Capable of being renewed.[25]

Renewable forever. A phrase used in the habendum of a lease and said to confer a right to renew in perpetuity.[26]

RENEWAL.[27] [§ 1] A. In General. "Renewal" is not a word of art;[28] it has no legal or technical signification;[29] and the cases construing the proper meaning to be ascribed to the term are by no means uniform;[30] it may mean whatever the parties intended when contracting,[31] and the construction is controlled by the intention of the parties.[32]

equivalent to[55] or synonymous with[56] "extension," it has also been distinguished from "extension;"[57] and it has been held that a renewal, as distinguished from a mere extension, is a separate and distinct contract,[58] the substitution of a new right or obligation for another of the same nature,[59] and that the word contemplates,[60] implies,[61] imports,[62] or requires[63] the execution of a new instrument; although it has been said that whether it does or not is dependent upon the intention of the parties,[64] or that it may depend upon a reading of the whole instrument,[65] and upon the practical construction given to its provisions by the parties themselves.[66] Further, "renewal" may sometimes be used in the sense of adoption,[67] confirmation,[68] or ratification[69] of contracts of persons under disability.[70]

[§ 4] 3. Phrases. "Any renewal or extension,"[71] "any renewal thereof,"[72] "legal renewal,"[73] "option of renewal,"[74] "renewal of a license,"[75] "renewal of another term,"[76] "renewal of bonds,"[77] "renewal or continuation,"[78] and "renewal or extension;"[79] also "renewals and duplications,"[80] and "renewals and replacements."[81]

[§ 5] C. As Adjective. "Renewal" is sometimes employed as an adjective.[82]

Phrases: "Renewal clause,"[83] "renewal license,"[84] and "renewal note."[85]

RENOUNCE.[86] To disclaim; disavow; to give up; forego; resign; relinquish.[87]

Phrase: "Waive and renounce."[88]

RENOVATE. To renew;[89] to repair.[90]

Applied to brick work, the word means to restore the ordinary appearance of new brick work.[91]

Renovated or process butter. Butter which has been subjected to any process by which it is melted, clarified, or refined, and made to resemble genuine butter, always excepting "adulterated butter;"[92] old, rancid, and putrid cow butter, which has been treated by a certain process, with heat and chemicals, by which the rancid taste and smell are removed therefrom, and the same is artificially colored so as to exactly resemble pure and fresh creamery butter.[93]

Renovating butter. A radical method of cleansing filthy butter by melting, straining, and blowing it into a spray, when hot water is allowed to percolate through the butter oil and then drawn off, and an emulsion made with milk, cooled into crystals, salted, and packed.[94]

RENOVATIONS.[95] As applied to a building, means the making new after decay, destruction, or impairment;[96] the creating anew;[97] the renewing materially;[98] the restoring by replacing worn-out, unsafe, or damaged parts.[99]

Phrase: "Renovations and changes."[1]

RENT.[2] [§ 1] A. Derivation. The word "rent" is derived from the Latin "redditus" or "reditus,"[3] and may be employed as a noun[4] or as a verb.[5]

[§ 2] B. As Noun—1. In General. The word has a well defined significance[6] and may be generally defined as a compensation[7] or return.[8]

profit out of lands and tenements;[17] and in this connection, its definitions, classification, elements, essentials and nature, as well as the rights and remedies in connection therewith, are fully treated elsewhere in this work.[18] As the term is employed in the discussion of principles of economics generally,[19] rent is the periodic return for the privilege of use;[20] a fixed compensation for a vested interest;[21] and in determining whether a charge is rent within the meaning of a statute prohibiting the exaction of rent, the measure of the charge and the mode of computation are relevant considerations.[22]

"Rents," in the plural, is a term that has been defined as meaning certain profits, not necessarily money, issuing yearly out of land and tenements corporeal;[23] although it has been held that the term is not confined to such as are annual.[24] While the term has been held equivalent to,[25] or synonymous with,[26] it also has been distinguished from,[27] "profits."

[§ 5] 4. Distinctions. A distinction has been made between what is called "ordinary rent," namely, the compensation for the ordinary use of land and that which arises, is derived from, or represents, the corpus of the land,[28] although it is said no suitable terminology has been devised to distinguish the latter from ordinary rent.[29] The term has also been distinguished from "annuity,"[30] "dividend,"[31] "interest,"[32] "purchase money,"[33] "royalty,"[34] "service charge,"[35] and "value of the use and occupation;"[36] but it has also been said that it is often used interchangeably with "profit,"[37] and "royalty."[38] It has been held not to include costs of alterations and improvements,[39] or repairs;[40] nor insurance;[41] nor taxes,[42] unless made to do so by the terms of the contract.[43]

[§ 6] 5. In Phrases. The noun occurs in numerous phrases.[44]

Net rent. An artificial expression[45] used in certain English war emergency statutes,[46] and defined therein as the standard rent less the amount of rates and taxes if paid by the landlord.[47]

Reasonable rent. A term used to designate a statutory charge for use and occupation, to be ascertained judicially through a method provided by the statute.[48]

Rent payable. The sum which the tenant is called upon to pay by way of rent;[49] the rent which the tenant has agreed to pay;[50] and not the net amount which remains in the landlord's pocket;[51] the sum payable between the parties, lessee and lessor,[52] and not that which might be payable by subtenants to the lessee.[53]

Rents and profits.[54] The term is well understood,[55] and generally it is equipollent with "profits and gains."[56] As applied to real estate,[57] the income[58] which does not impair or diminish the fee;[59] or the net income of it;[60] the sum annually yielded by the same.[61] Sometimes the words are used as referring to the rentable value;[62] and in a special sense, the materials derived from the ordinary and reasonable, or the usual, operation of opened mines, quarries, oil wells, and other property of this character constitute the "rents and profits" thereof;[63] and hence royalties under mining leases have been held to constitute rents and profits from land.[64]

Rents, issues, and profits. The profits arising from property generally;[65] the yearly products of the land;[66] or from the use of realty.[67] The strict meaning of the words, as opposed to land, is the annual rents, issues and profits;[68] hence equivalent to "interest and income."[69] The phrase applies only to net profits,[70] and such as are of the nature of rent.[71] It includes the proceeds of the land whether in money or in kind;[72] and it has been held to include the increase of live stock,[73] although perhaps not in a strictly etymological sense;[74] and sometimes, particularly in construing trust instruments,[75] the phrase, unless restrained by the context, will be given a meaning broad enough to include the sale of the property itself.[76]

Standard rent. An artificial expression[77] used in the English Rent Restrictions Acts,[78] and defined, in the earlier ones, as the rent at which a house was let on Aug. 3, 1914.[79]

the right to occupy lands, paying a certain sum therefor;[3] to hire;[4] to lease;[5] to let;[6] to let out.[7]

Rented. A term which refers as well to the act of a lessee as to that of the lessor,[8] and which, aside from any qualification by the context, naturally means that the tenant has the exclusive possession for the time.[9] Phrases: "Rented for pasture,"[10] and "rented or leased."[11]

Renting. A word applied indiscriminately to both parties to the transaction;[12] and in a loose way,[13] the term may be used for "hiring."[14] Phrases: "Party renting,"[15] and "renting or leasing for carrying passengers."[16]

RENTABLE. Capable of being rented or let out for rent.[17]

Rentable value. The gross amount for which the land can be rented, without deducting therefrom the taxes;[18] the price or sum for which the land may be rented.[19]

Net rentable value. The amount for which the land can be rented less the taxes thereon.[20]

RENTAGE. Rent.[21]

RENTAL.[22] [§ 1] A. As Noun—1. Special Sense. In English law, a roll on which the rents of a manor are registered or set down, and by which the lord's bailiff collects the same.[23] It contains the lands and tenements let to each tenant, the names of the tenants and other particulars.[24]

[§ 2] 2. Ordinary Sense—a. In General. A charge for the use of property;[25] a sum total of rents.[26] It has been said to be an equivalent of "hire,"[27] and "royalty;"[28] but distinguished from "tax."[29]

[§ 3] b. Rentals. The term has a clear and definite meaning,[30] signifying payments received periodically for the use of property,[31] especially real property;[32] and depends in no way on the particular use made of the property by the lessee,[33] nor on the amount or extent of such use.[34] In its ordinary sense, it must be taken as implying a fixed sum, or property amounting to a fixed sum, to be paid at stated times for the use of property[35] and used with reference to patented devices,[36] it is said that the word ordinarily means specific sums paid annually, or at other stated periods, for the right to use a patented device;[37] and in this connection it has been distinguished from "royalties."[38]

Loss of rent as element of liability under fire insurance policy see Fire Insurance § 461.

I. DEFINITION

[§ 1] In one sense rent insurance may be said to be an insurance contract[1] indemnifying insured against loss of rent under the circumstances specified in the policy.[2] And while loss of rent may be the only loss covered by a particular policy,[3] indemnities against rent losses very generally are incorporated as clauses in policies insuring against fire[4] or other destruction[5] of leased property.

As a species of guaranty insurance[6] rent insurance, sometimes called "realty revenue insurance,"[7] is an insurance contract[8] whereunder insured is guaranteed a certain rent[9] or rental[10] from lands and tenements.[11]

In the nature of liability insurance[12] the term "rent insurance" may, perhaps somewhat inappropriately, be applied to an insurance contract[13] indemnifying a tenant for any loss accruing to him by reason of having to pay rent for premises during such time as they may become untenantable for a cause specified in the contract.[14]

II. INSURABLE INTEREST

[§ 2] Rent constitutes an insurable interest in one who is entitled to receive it.[15] A tenant has an insurable interest in rent for which he may be liable.[16]

Extinction. General rules[17] govern as to effect of the loss or extinction of the insurable interest.[18] Thus a lessee's insurable interest may become extinguished by his subletting premises[19] or by the reëntry of the lessor,[20] but not by a reëntry for the purpose of rebuilding with the lessee's assent and not to his entire exclusion.[21]

III. THE CONTRACT

[§ 3] General rules controlling the construction of contracts,[22] including contracts of insurance generally,[23] govern the construction of an insurance policy covering a rent loss.[24]

IV. EXTENT OF LOSS AND LIABILITY

[§ 4] As in the case of other kinds of insurance,[25] the extent of loss and liability therefor under a rent insurance contract is fixed by the contract;[26] and particular provisions with respect thereto, including stipulations as to the method of computing the loss, must be followed.[27] Depending on the terms of the particular contract and the construction put thereon,[28] the amount recoverable under some policies is the full amount of the rents lost without deductions,[29] and under other policies will be recovered a less amount.[30] Money paid by an insurer of a lessor, indemnifying him against loss of rent, although such money was applied by the lessor to the rent in relief of the lessee, was held not to affect the lessee's right to recover on his insurance contract indemnifying him for loss by reason of having to pay rent while the premises were untenantable.[31]

[a] Rule applied.—Where defendant had insured plaintiff against loss of the rents of certain premises by fire and at the time plaintiff was a subtenant of the first floor at a yearly rental, and had sublet the premises with a provision terminating the lease on destruction of the building by fire, and the building was destroyed thereby, plaintiff was not entitled to judgment on the policy. [a] Rule applied.—Plaintiff, a tenant paying eight thousand five hundred dollars yearly rent, was insured by defendant for six thousand dollars, by a policy reciting: "It being understood that this policy is to indemnify the assured for any loss accruing to her by reason of having to pay rent for the within-described building . . . [while] untenantable by reason of fire; . . . it being understood that the sum insured is the annual rental of the property, and the amount of loss is to be computed on that basis." It was held that plaintiff, having paid rent for a year during which the premises were untenantable by reason of fire, could recover of defendant the full six thousand dollars, although six months after the fire the landlord went into possession of the lot to put up a larger building, extending onto other land, under an agreement with plaintiff that he might do so without affecting plaintiff's liability for the rent under the old lease till completion of the new building, which plaintiff agreed to rent, and although an insurance company in which the landlord had his rents insured, while denying liability, paid two thousand dollars to him for the benefit of plaintiff. In pursuance of such written agreement, E procured defendant's contract to insure the completion of the buildings, made the conveyances, and received the purchase money. It was held that the contract of insurance was binding on defendant, notwithstanding the original agreement was to convey real estate, and was not signed by plaintiff, or ratified in writing, since the insurance did not relate to the conveyance, but to what was to be done after the conveyance).

[b] Particular provisions.—(1) Where the policy stipulated that in case the building "shall be rendered untenantable by fire, [insurer] shall be liable to assured for the actual loss of rent ensuing therefrom, based upon the rentals in force from the rented portions of the premises at the time of the fire, not exceeding the sum insured; [and] the loss to be computed from the date of the fire for the time it would require to put the premises in a tenantable condition, excluding from such time such portion thereof as may be consumed by a strike or by any other delay beyond the control of the assured," assured was held liable for such amount of rent, at the rate paid for the portions rented at the time of the fire, as would have become payable to assured during the period required to restore the premises to a tenantable condition, without deduction for any expenses connected with the renting. Whitney Est. Co. v. Northern Assur. Co., 155 Cal. 51, 101 P 911, 23 LRANS 123, 18 AnnCas 512. (2) Under fire policy insuring lessee against loss of rents "actually sustained" on subleased portions of premises rendered untenantable for time necessary to restore them, as ascertained by appraisement, if not agreed on, in amount not exceeding proportion of sum insured to actual annual rentals, insured was entitled to full amount of rents lost, without deduction for rental he was relieved from paying under terms of his lease; such recovery not impinging on principle that insurance policy is essentially a contract of indemnity only. American Ins. Co. v. Mattox, 219 Ala. 106, 120 S 912 [appr Whitney Est. Co. v. Northern Assur. Co., supra]. (3) An insurance policy, indemnifying against loss of rents caused by fire or lightning, actually sustained on rented premises, for such period as may be reasonably necessary to restore the premises to the same tenantable condition as before the fire, covers the period needed to place the contract for repairs, and was not limited to the time actually spent in the making of the repairs. [30] Palatine Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, 109 Md. 100, 71 A 775; Van Nest v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 134 Minn. 94, 158 NW 725, LRA1916F 693; Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Pires, (Tex. Civ. A.) 165 SW 565.

[a] Particular provisions.—(1) A policy provided that "the intention of this insurance is to make good the loss of rents caused by fire or lightning actually sustained by the assured on occupied or rented portions of the premises which have become untenantable, for and during such time as may be necessary to restore the premises to the same tenantable condition as before the fire." Since under the terms of the policy, the indemnification is expressly limited to such actual loss as might be sustained during the necessary period of reconstruction its language cannot be construed to embrace losses which might accrue by reason of necessary delay attendant upon the retenanting of the building subsequently to such period and after its actual reconstruction. Chronicle Bldg. Co. v. New Hampshire F. Ins. Co., 21 Ga. A. 687, 94 SE 1043. (2) Under a policy insuring rents, but requiring insured to rebuild, and providing that insured should not be liable beyond the actual value destroyed by fire for loss caused by ordinance or law regulating construction or repair of buildings or by interruption of business or otherwise, insurer is not liable for loss of rent caused by the city authorities in delaying rebuilding, pending ordinance relocating street lines. Palatine Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, 109 Md. 100, 71 A 775. (3) A policy insuring rents declared that the loss should be computed from the date of the fire and cease on the premises again becoming tenantable, pursuant to assured's agreement to rebuild or repair in as short a time as the nature of the case should admit, and if assured elected not to rebuild or repair, then the loss should be determined by the time which would have been required therefor. It also provided that the company should not be liable for loss directly or indirectly caused by order of any civil authority. It was held that insurer was not liable for loss of rents during a period in which rebuilding was delayed because building permits were refused by the city authorities pending definite decision concerning certain street improvements. Palatine Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, 107 Md. 341, 68 A 484, 16 LRANS 1055. (4) Under a policy insuring rents, but requiring insured to rebuild as soon as the nature of the case would admit, and providing that insurer should not be liable for loss caused by "interruption of business," insurer is not liable for loss of rent from interruption of business caused by delays in rebuilding resulting from the fall of débris of the fire throughout the burnt district. Palatine Ins. Co. v. O'Brien, 109 Md. 100, 71 A 775. (5) A policy of insurance against loss of rent, due to a fire which rendered the insured property untenantable, provided for payment of the actual loss sustained, "not exceeding the sum insured, nor one-twelfth of that amount for any one month." A fire occurred rendering the company liable for the loss, and the same was amicably adjusted at an amount equal to one-half the face of the policy, which was paid. A second fire occurred some three months later, resulting in a further loss. It is held that the policy remained in force after the first loss at one-half the amount thereof, and that the monthly payments to be made in discharge of liability under the second loss are limited to one-twelfth of that amount, and not one-twelfth of the original sum insured. Van Nest v. Citizens' Ins. Co., 134 Minn. 94, 158 NW 725, LRA1916F 693.

[b] Provisions of the valued policy law making the amount named in an insurance policy covering improvements on real estate conclusive evidence of value in case of a total loss do not apply to a policy which insures against the loss in rents through the destruction of such improvements. Amusement Syndicate Co. v. Prussian Nat. Ins. Co., 85 Kan. 367, 116 P 620.

[a] Presumptions.—Under a policy insuring rents, but requiring insured to rebuild as soon as the case would admit, it must be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that insured took possession of the premises to rebuild as soon after the fire as possible. [b] Sufficiency.—In an action upon an insurance policy indemnifying insured against the loss of rents on property for the period reasonably necessary to restore the property to the same tenantable condition as before the fire, evidence was held to sustain a finding that the time consumed was reasonably necessary to restore the building. [a] Proper instruction.—In an action on a policy, indemnifying against the loss of rents on premises for such period as was reasonably necessary to restore the premises to the same tenantable condition as before the fire, the evidence being undisputed that from the date of the fire to the restoration of the building the rents were one hundred seventy five dollars, the insurance company contesting alone the amount of recovery, the court properly charged that, if the time actually spent was no more than was reasonably necessary, they should find for the insured for the sum of one hundred seventy five dollars. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Pires, (Tex. Civ. A.) 165 SW 565.

[b] Improper instruction.—In an action on a policy insuring rents, an instruction that there could be no recovery for loss of rents which accrued between the fire and the time when plaintiff entered into possession was unauthorized, there being no evidence that plaintiff delayed taking possession of the premises after the fire. As applied to a contract,[12] a total refusal to perform it by one party before the time for performance arrives.[13]

In connection with negotiable instruments,[14] the word is used in the sense of "release."[15]

With reference to executor of a will,[16] it is an act whereby a person, named in a will as executor, declines to take on himself the burden of that office.[17]

Sometimes said to be synonymous with "abdication,"[18] and "relinquishment."[19]

Phrase: "Absolute and unconditional renunciation."[20]

RENVOI.[21]

REO. In Spanish law, the defendant, either in a civil or criminal proceeding;[22] in contradistinction to the plaintiff or "actor."[23]

REO ABSENTE. In the absence of the defendant.[24]

REOPENING.[25]

REO PRÆSENTE. The defender [defendant] being present.[26]

REORGANIZATION.[27] A term employed with reference to corporations,[28] and has been defined as meaning the reconstruction or rehabilitation of a corporation, especially a railroad, usually effected compulsorily by a receivership and foreclosure.[29] The term in common use denotes the carrying out, by proper agreements and legal proceedings, of a business plan for winding up the affairs of, or foreclosing a mortgage or mortgages upon the property of, insolvent corporations.[30] It is commonly applied to the formation of a new corporation by the creditors and shareholders of a corporation which is in financial difficulties, for the purpose of purchasing the company's works and other property, after the foreclosure of a mortgage or judicial sale.[31]

though it does not extend to improvements of the soil.[92] It has been distinguished from "construction work,"[93] "improvements,"[94] "maintenance,"[95] "new construction,"[96] "reconditioning,"[97] and "reconstruction."[98]

[§ 8] 7. Phrases. The word "repair" may be found in many phrases,[99] such as "repair and improvement,"[1] "good repair,"[2] "keep . . . in good repair,"[3] "keeping in proper repair,"[4] "keep . . . in repair,"[5] "ordinary repair,"[6] "out of repair,"[7] "putting . . . in perfectly good repair,"[8] "reconstruction and repair,"[9] "repair and maintenance,"[10] "repair of stationary engines,"[11] and "want of repair."[12] Similarly the word "repairs" has been used in a variety of phrases,[13] such as "extraordinary repairs,"[14] "furnish all repairs,"[15] "necessary repairs,"[16] "needful repairs,"[17] "ordinary repairs,"[18] "repairs and necessaries,"[19] "repairs or alterations,"[20] "repairs or improvements,"[21] and "repairs, supplies and necessaries."[22]

[§ 9] C. As Verb—1. In General. As it is ordinarily understood,[23] or used,[24] the verb "to repair" may mean to add to;[25] to amend;[26] to maintain;[27]

REPLACE.[66] An unambiguous word,[67] defined as meaning to be a substitute for;[68] to cause to supply the place of in any manner;[69] to fill or take the place of;[70] to fulfill the end or office of;[71] to make good;[72] to put a substitute in place of;[73] to repair;[74] to restore;[75] to return;[76] to substitute something competent in the place of,[77] as of something which has been displaced, or lost, or destroyed;[78] to supersede.[79] It does not necessarily mean to duplicate;[80] nor does it ordinarily mean the right to exchange or substitute.[81]

Phrases: "Replace and make good,"[82] "replace demised property,"[83] and "replacing property damaged or destroyed."[84]

REPLACEMENT.[85] Restoration[86] of worn-out parts;[87] restoration of property to its condition prior to injury.[88] The term is broader than "repairs;"[89] it contemplates the replacing of those portions and parts that have become destroyed;[90] but it does not ordinarily mean the right to exchange or substitute.[91]

As an adjective the term is sometimes employed,[92] as in the phrases "replacement cost,"[93] "replacement cost new,"[94] and "replacement value."[95]

REPLEADER.[96]

REPLEGIARE EST REM APUD ALIUM DETENTUM, CAUTIONE LEGITIMA INTERPOSITA, REDIMERE.[98]

REPLEGIARI FACIAS. Literally "You cause to be replevied."[99] In old English law, the original writ in the action of replevin, superseded by the statute of Marlbridge c 21.[1]

REPLENISH. To fill again; to fill up.[2]

I. DEFINITIONS

[By Joseph W. Rouse]

[§ 1] Replevin is an action at law for the recovery of specific personal chattels, wrongfully taken and detained, or wrongfully detained, with damages which the wrongful taking or detention has occasioned.[1]

Claim and delivery. In some jurisdictions the statutory remedy given in lieu of the common-law action of replevin is styled claim and delivery.[2] Claim and delivery is an action to determine the right to possession of personal property.[3] For the purpose of uniformity, the term replevin will be used throughout this title.

The term "trial of right of property" is applied in some jurisdictions to a statutory remedy given for the determination of title to property seized under attachment,[4] execution,[5] sequestration,[6] or other like writ or process when it is claimed by a third person not a party to the writ.

II. NATURE AND SCOPE OF REMEDY

[By Joseph W. Rouse]

[§ 2] A. In General. Replevin originated in common law as a remedy against the wrongful exercise of the right of distress for rent,[7] and according to some authorities could only be maintained in such a case;[8] and under some statutes has been limited to such cases.[9] But by the great weight of authority the remedy is not and never was restricted to cases of wrongful distress in the absence of any statutes relating to the subject but is a proper remedy for any unlawful taking.[10]

Statutory provisions and modifications. In some jurisdictions the action of replevin is still controlled by the common law, subject to such modifications thereof as are made by the statutory provisions regulating the action,[11] and a statute which extends the application of the remedy to cases to which it did not extend at common law has been held not to repeal or supersede the common law remedy.[12] In other jurisdictions the common-law writ of replevin has been abolished, and the action cannot be maintained except under the statute;[13] and, generally, replevin proceedings are largely affected by statute.[14] It has been said that the action of replevin is not, strictly speaking, a common-law action, but mainly, if not entirely, of statutory origin and of a peculiar nature.[15] In its origin the allowance of the writ was confined to cases where there had been a tortious taking,[16] but by virtue of statutes the remedy has been extended to cases of unlawful detention, although the original taking was lawful.[17] While at common law the action tested only the right of possession at the time of the commencement of the action,[18] under the statutes the prevailing party may have alternative judgment for the value of the property as well as for possession, where the losing party retains possession.[19]

Claim and delivery. The statutory action of "claim and delivery" has been held to be only a modification of the common-law remedy of replevin,[20]

[a] Historical note.—(1) At common law a person claiming the right to possession of personalty could enforce his claim by no process other than the writ of replevin which issued out of chancery. Kurzweil v. Story, etc., Piano Co., 95 Misc. 484, 159 NYS 231; 3 Blackstone Comm. p 146. (2) This being a cumbersome method of procedure various statutes were passed facilitating the procedure and protecting the rights of the parties. See statutory provisions. (3) The statute of Marlbridge (52 Hen. III c 21) dispensed with the suing out of the writ; then the sheriff was allowed to appoint deputies (1 Philip & Mary 12) and the security to be given on procuring the return of the property was provided for by St. Westminster 2 (13 Edw. I c 2) and further by 11 Geo. II c 19. Kurzweil v. Story, etc., Piano Co., 95 Misc. 484, 159 NYS 231. (4) Some of these earlier statutes have been held to be a part of the common law of some jurisdictions. Rosenthal v. Lehman, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 1 (St. 17 Charles II c 12). (5) "The action of replevin formerly was said to be of two sorts, namely, "in the detinet" or "detinetis"—the former, where the goods are still detained by the person who took them, to recover the value thereof and damages, and the latter, as the word imports, where the goods have been delivered to the party. But the former law is now obsolete, and there does not appear in any of the books any proceeding in replevin which was not commenced by writ requiring the proper officer to cause the goods to be replevied to him or by plaint in the sheriff's court, the immediate process upon which is a precept to replevy the goods of the party levying the plaint, both of which proceedings are in rem —that is, to have the goods again." [a] Effect of statutes.—A statute abolishing replevin and substituting the action of claim and delivery before the circuit court supersedes a statute requiring proceedings in replevin before justices to be the same as proceedings before the circuit court. McKnight v. Crinnion, 22 Mo. 559.

and merely a substitute therefor,[21] and has been held to be substantially the same as that remedy.[22] However, it has been said that the remedy of claim and delivery is not an independent form of action,[23] but is merely an auxiliary remedy available in any action wherein plaintiff has a present right to possession of personal property.[24]

[§ 3] B. Action at Law and Ex Delicto. Replevin being strictly a proceeding at law, it cannot be invoked as in an equitable suit for rescission, modification, or cancellation of a contract.[25] It has been held, however, that a statutory action of replevin may be sufficiently flexible to allow determination of equitable rights when such rights relate to the property or rights arising out of the contract, and not to the rescission thereof.[26] It is an action ex delicto and not ex contractu,[27] and all persons who participate in the tort are liable either jointly or severally.[28]

[§ 4] C. As Possessory Action. Replevin is a possessory action.[29] The property is the subject of the action.[30] The gist of the action is plaintiff's right to immediate possession[31] and defendant's wrongful taking[32] or wrongful or unlawful detention.[33] The issues to be determined are plaintiff's present right to possession of the property[34] and defendant's unlawful detention or possession;[35] and the question of title is not necessarily involved in such an action,[36] although it may be put in issue.[37] The primary object of the action is the recovery of the property itself[38] with damages for the taking and detention,[39] and secondarily the recovery of a sum of money equivalent to the value of the property taken and detained, with interest thereon.[40] Being purely possessory, replevin is not a proper remedy for the collection of a debt,[41] nor for money due on account,[42] nor to enforce a mere contractual duty,[43] nor to enforce delivery of a deed,[44] nor to determine defendant's liability as indorser of a note,[45] and it cannot be sustained for the purpose of trying the right of property.[46] It affords no relief for the adjudication of successive liens.[46½] An action to be declared owner of an interest in a patent is not an action of replevin.[47] The right to hold office in a corporation cannot be determined in an action of replevin of corporation property appertaining to that office.[48]

[§ 6] E. Compared with, and Distinguished from, Other Remedies.[55] Replevin is analogous to an action of trespass,[56] or trover,[57] but being partly in rem[58] is therefore distinguishable from trespass and trover, in which action damages only are sought to be recovered.[59] However, in all cases where trespass or trover can be maintained for the unlawful conversion of goods, replevin will also lie.[60] In the choice of remedies, as between replevin and trover, or trespass, the preference is with the former, in that it restores the property itself.[61] The action of replevin is regarded as being the same as an action of trover and governed by the same rules when plaintiff seeks judgment for the value of the property and damages for its detention.[62] There is no necessity for a conversion of the property, as is necessary to maintain trover.[63] Failure to claim immediate delivery will not change the action into one for conversion.[64] In some jurisdictions the statutory action of replevin combines the features of the common-law actions of replevin and detinue.[65] The action of replevin is not an extraordinary remedy in derogation of the common law, like the proceeding in attachment.[66]

[a] Distinguished from trespass.—The whole proceeding of replevin, at common law, is distinguished from that in trespass in this, among other things, that, while the latter is intended to procure a compensation in damages for goods wrongfully taken out of the actual or constructive possession of plaintiff, the object of the former is to procure the restitution of the goods themselves; and this it effects by a preliminary ex parte interference by the officer of the law with the possession. Mennie v. Blake, 6 E. & B. 842, 88 ECL 842, 119 Reprint 1078 (holding likewise that the action of replevin, apart from the replevin itself, is again distinguished from trespass by this, that, at the time of declaring, the supposed wrongful possession has been put an end to, and the litigation proceeds for the purpose of deciding whether he, who by the supposition was originally possessed, and out of whose possession the goods were taken, and to whom they have been restored, ought to retain that possession, or whether it ought to be restored to defendant).

[b] Distinguished from trover.—(1) "The essential distinction between trover and replevin as regards the rule of damages, aside from the element of willfulness in the taking or detention, is briefly this: In trover the title to the property is regarded as having passed to the defendant, who is therefore liable for its value, simply, with interest. In replevin the title is treated as still in the plaintiff, who is therefore to recover not only the chattel itself, or its value, but also damages for its detention, of which interest may be the measure, but is not in all cases the necessary limit." Sedgwick Dam. (8th ed) § 528 [quot La Vie v. Crosby, 43 Or. 612, 616, 74 P 220]. (2) Trover is an action to recover damages while "replevin" or detinue is primarily an action to recover the property, and a judgment is given only in the absence of ability to secure the specific articles claimed. III. PROPERTY RECOVERABLE

[By Joseph W. Rouse]

[§ 7] A. In General—1. Nature of Property Recoverable in General.[67] The general rule is that a writ of replevin is effectual for the recovery of personal property only, and that it cannot be maintained to recover real property.[68] The general rule is that all personal property,[69] including animate as well as inanimate movable property,[70] unlawfully taken or retained from the owner thereof, is the subject of an action of replevin. Replevin will not lie for incorporeal personal property,[71] such as shares in a corporation, as distinguished from certificates of stock[72] nor will it lie for property destroyed and not in existence at the commencement of the action.[73] Replevin will not lie to recover property received in exchange for plaintiff's property.[74]

Enhancement of value.[75] Subject to rules hereinafter considered as to the right of defendant to elect to return the value of the property taken or the identical property,[76] replevin will lie so long as the identity of the property may be traced, notwithstanding it has greatly enhanced in value.[77]

[§ 8] 2. Records, Writings, and Documents. While a valueless piece of paper is not the subject of replevin[78] the general rule is that replevin will lie for the recovery of records, documents, and writings in general, of value, unlawfully detained.[79] However, while a deed, as such, is recoverable in replevin where it is unlawfully detained and the controversy involves nothing else,[80] replevin will not lie to recover a deed where the title to land is involved in the action,[81] although the action has been held proper where the only fact to be determined, affecting the

Wis.—Flannigan v. Goggins, 71 Wis. 28, 36 NW 846.

[a] Rule applied.—(1) Although replevin will lie merely to recover possession of a specific paper, and not to test title to land conveyed, it will not lie for the unlawful detention of a title deed, where there is dispute about its delivery, and the controversy involves determination of title to land. Walden v. Feller, 99 Misc. 576, 164 NYS 493 (plaintiff cannot maintain replevin to recover possession of paper, claimed to have been executed and delivered by defendant, creating in plaintiff a life estate in title, is that of the delivery of the deed.[82]

[§ 9] 3. Bills, Notes, Checks, Bonds, or Certificates of Deposit. A promissory note is personal property, within the meaning of the various statutes, and may be recovered in an action of replevin.[83] Replevin likewise lies for the recovery of a check,[84] bill of exchange,[85] a bond,[86] or certificate of deposit.[87] However, after a check has been paid at bank and returned canceled to the drawer, being held by him only as a voucher, the drawer cannot resort to the action of replevin for the check, to enforce a claim he may have to be paid the amount of it by the payee.[88]

[§ 10] 4. Money or Scrip. The general rule is that money is not the subject of an action of replevin,[89] unless it is so marked or labeled as to be capable of identification.[90]

Savings accounts, as represented by a pass book admitted to be in defendant's possession, may be recovered in replevin.[91]

[§ 11] 5. Undivided Shares in Property.[92] The general rule is undisputed that replevin lies only for specific property, capable of identification or separation so as to be seized in kind,[93] and cannot be maintained for an undivided interest or share,[94] except in cases of fraud or wrongful confusion of property.[95] A further exception is made, by some authorities, where the property sought be replevied consists of a part of a larger mass of the same nature and quality which can be easily divided into aliquot parts.[96]

It seems, however, that if the character of the property is so essentially changed by the mixture that one aliquot part would not be the equivalent of another, the rule is otherwise.[97]

[§ 12] 6. Commingled Goods. Generally, where property cannot be identified or separated so as to be seized in kind, replevin will not lie;[98] however, under statutes allowing the alternative recovery of the property or the value thereof, it has been held that an action for possession may be maintained in such a case.[99] Further, where goods are mixed, and are of the same nature and value, although not capable of an actual separation by identifying each particle, yet if a division can be made of equal value, then each party may claim his aliquot part, and enforce his right in an action of replevin;[1] although the contrary has been held,[2] where defendant, with fraudulent intent, takes property of plaintiff and intermingles it with property of his own so that they cannot be distinguished, plaintiff may maintain replevin for at least his share thereof.[3] In such cases the owner is allowed to take his own share of the bulk, kind for kind and measure for measure.[4] If the mixture occurs through plaintiff's fault, he is not entitled to maintain replevin for his share of the property,[5] but only for such part thereof as he can identify as his own.[6]

[§ 13] 7. Articles Manufactured from Material Taken. If property be taken from the possession of the rightful owner by a willful trespasser or thief, who manufactures or converts it into a different article, the manufactured article, if it can be identified in its improved form, may be retaken by replevin from the wrongdoer,[7] or from a purchaser thereof whether he be an innocent purchaser[8] or one having notice,[9] because the wrongdoer has no title which he can convey,[10] however great the change that may be wrought;[11] and this is the rule of the civil as well as the common law.[12] The new product, in its improved state, belongs to the owner of the original materials, provided it be proved to have been made from them.[13] To authorize replevin for chattels so manufactured it is of course necessary that their

[a] Grain.—(1) Where grain belonging to different owners has been stored in mass with their consent, each may, if necessary for the maintenance of his rights, maintain replevin for his share (Piazzek v. identity be shown;[14] and in all cases where the new product cannot be identified by mere inspection, the original must be traced by the testimony of witnesses from hand to hand through the process of transformation.[15] Although the contrary has been suggested,[16] the weight of authority is to the effect that where the wrongful taking was in good faith, and not an intentional injury, the owner of the original material cannot maintain replevin after it has undergone a transformation which converts it into an article substantially different.[17] Likewise, if property wrongfully taken afterward comes into the hands of an innocent holder, who converts it into an article of different species, so that its identity is destroyed, the original owner cannot maintain replevin for it.[18] But if property wrongfully taken comes into the hands of one who has actual or constructive notice of the trespass, and he converts it into a different article, the original owner may maintain replevin for it if he can identify it.[19]

[§ 14] 8. Property on Defendant's Person. Property worn on the person cannot be seized on a writ of replevin,[20] and it makes no difference that it was worn for the purpose of keeping it beyond the reach of legal process,[21] but an action for recovery of such property may be maintained where no order of delivery is made and the article is not taken from the person.[22]

[§ 15] 9. Property Distrained for Rent. In the absence of any statute to the contrary[23] it has been held that property taken from its owner on a distress for rent against another may be recovered in replevin.[24] Replevin will not lie against one who has levied a distress warrant against property where the property remains in the actual possession of its owner.[25] The remedies of a tenant or owner of property for wrongful distress for rent, including the remedy of replevin, his right to pursue them, and defenses thereto are treated at length elsewhere in this work.[26]

[§ 16] 10. Slaves. Replevin, it was held, would lie for the recovery of slaves,[27] but not for a free negro.[28]

[§ 17] 11. Dead Bodies. As there is no right of property, in a strict sense or in the ordinary use of the term, in the dead body of a human being,[29] replevin will not lie for a corpse[30] or for a coffin, with the corpse inclosed within it, after burial.[31]

[§ 18] B. Property Attached to, or Severed from, Realty[32]—1. Property Severed from Land in General. The owner of realty may maintain replevin for chattels wrongfully severed therefrom or for articles wrongfully severed therefrom which by reason of the severance become personalty,[33] unless the land is held in adverse possession.[34] It is not to be un-

[a] Reason for rule.—In a case of this kind, the change in the species of the chattel is not an intentional wrong to the original owner. It is therefore regarded as a destruction or consumption of the original materials, and the true owner is not permitted to trace their identity into the manufactured article for the purpose of appropriating to his own use the labor and skill of the innocent occupant who wrought the change; but he is put to his action for damages as for a thing consumed and may recover its value as it was when the conversion or consumption took place. The evils which would flow from the unrestricted use of a civil process to search the person and to seize from it articles of dress or use or ornament, are obvious and manifold. It would bring the officer of law in direct contact with the citizen, under circumstances well calculated to excite irritation and anger, and lead directly to breaches of the peace. It would place in the hands of wicked and evil disposed persons the means of annoyance and injury, and the power to interfere wantonly and without just cause with the most sacred rights of the person." derstood, however, that an action of replevin can be maintained only when plaintiff can make title to the chattel by making title to the land from which it was severed.[35] The rule does not exclude proof of title on the part of plaintiff where no question of adverse possession is involved, for in all cases where the owner of land sues for property severed from the freehold, the action must rest upon the proof in the first instance of title or right of possession to the premises in plaintiff, otherwise no action for the recovery of such property would ever lie.[36]

[§ 19] 2. Buildings.[37] Since the title to land cannot be litigated in an action of replevin,[38] the general rule is that replevin cannot be maintained for the recovery of possession of a house attached to the freehold.[39] However, a house or building, which by the express contract of the parties, or by implied agreement, is treated by all the interested parties as personalty, may be the subject of replevin;[40] and where a house has been severed from the realty, the owner may maintain replevin for its recovery.[41]

[§ 20] 3. Trees and Timber. The owner or person lawfully in possession of land may maintain replevin for wood and timber unlawfully severed from the soil,[42] even where it has been converted into a manufactured article, so long as it is capable of identification.[43] It is essential, however, that the land should not be in the adverse possession of another, whether defendant or a third person.[44] Where the owner of land makes a valid sale in writing of growing trees thereon, they become chattels in contemplation of law, and if a person who subsequently buys the land cuts and removes the trees, the purchaser of the trees may maintain replevin therefor.[45]

[§ 21] 4. Growing or Standing Crops. The general rule is that replevin will lie for growing or standing crops by the owner thereof from whom they are unlawfully detained,[46] and this without regard to whether the crops are growing or, having matured, have ceased to derive any nutriment from the soil.[47] The rule is otherwise, however, when the land upon which the crop stands is held adversely to plaintiff.[48] Replevin will lie for a crop of growing fruit sold while still upon the trees.[49]

[§ 22] 5. Harvested Crops. Where crops have been wrongfully severed from the land of its owner, he may maintain replevin therefor if in possession of the land;[50] but in accordance with well settled principles[51] the action cannot be maintained if the land is in the adverse possession of another.[52] The remedy it has been said is ejectment and trespass for mesne profits.[53] However, the fact that a defendant in ejectment reënters and harvests the crop does not prevent plaintiff from replevying it.[54] Where a cropper takes part of the crop before any division is made, the landlord may replevy the part so taken.[55]

[§ 23] 6. Minerals. Replevin will lie for the recovery of ore taken wrongfully from a mine[56] or slate so taken from a quarry.[57] But replevin will not lie until the mineral has been severed from the realty.[58]

[§ 24] C. Property in Custody of Law—1. In General. It is a well-settled doctrine of the common law that replevin will not lie for goods in the custody of the law,[59] any interference with goods so held being considered an infringement of the prerogative of the court and a contempt thereof.[60] However, the rule does not apply where process by virtue of which property is seized is void.[61] The seizure must be on valid and sufficient process.[62]

[§ 25] 2. Property Seized under Execution[63]—a. Right of Defendant in Execution To Bring Replevin—(1) In General. The general rule is well settled that where property has been taken under a valid execution it cannot be replevied from the officer levying execution by defendant in the execution,[64] nor replevied by any one claiming title under him,[65] and in many jurisdictions this rule is adopted by statute.[66] Nor can he bring an action of replevin against one who is the officer's agent or depositary, the possession of the latter being none the less the custody of the law.[67] At common law it is a contempt of court issuing an execution to replevy property taken under it by the execution debtor.[68] The general rule is not in any way affected by the fact that the property seized was set apart to defendant in bankruptcy proceedings commenced after entry of the judgment on which execution issued,[69] nor by irregularities in the proceedings for the judgment on which the execution was issued;[70] nor by the neglect of the officer taking the goods on execution to make an inventory;[71] nor by the fact that the judgment on which the execution issued had been paid,[72] nor the execution satisfied,[73] or that the execution contained a recital that the judgment had been paid, as such a statement in no sense affects the formality of the writ.[74]

[§ 26] (2) Where Judgment on Which Execution Issued Is Void. In some jurisdictions defendant in execution may maintain replevin for goods seized thereunder against the officer making the levy, where the judgment on which the execution issued is void;[75] and this is so, although the execution is regular on its face.[76] While such an execution would protect the officer when proceeded against as a wrongdoer, it cannot be made the basis of a claim of right to the property seized, without proof of a valid judgment.[77] In other jurisdictions, it is held that replevin will not lie for property seized on an execution regular on its face,[78] and where the statute requires an affidavit showing that the property was not seized on execution,[79] it is a good defense that the execution, although issued on a void judgment, was regular on its face;[80] although similar statutes have been construed to permit the action where the judgment, and therefore the execution, is void.[81]

[§ 27] (3) Where Process Is Void on Its Face. A writ of execution void on its face will not protect an officer who undertakes to execute it, and the execution defendant may maintain replevin against the officer for its recovery.[82]

[§ 28] (4) Where Judgment Was Rendered after Issuance of Execution. If at the time an execution issued, and replevin was brought by defendant in execution there was no judgment or authority for the execution whatever, a judgment subsequently entered cannot operate back upon the rights of such defendant and take away a right of possession which existed at the time his action was commenced.[83]

[§ 29] b. Right of Stranger to Execution To Maintain Replevin—(1) In General. In many jurisdictions it is well settled that goods or property seized under a writ of execution and not belonging to defendant in the writ may be replevied from the

[a] Reason for rule.—(1) "The reasons for this are of that imperative nature that make the rule indispensable to the administration of the law. Execution has been called the end of the law. But it will be only the beginning, and there would be no end of the law, if after a person has established his right by judgment, the defendant's effects may be rescued from the execution at his will by suing out a writ of replevin." McLeod v. Oates, 30 N. C. 387. (2) "If a defendant in the execution, after judgment had been legally entered against him upon a full and fair trial, were tolerated in bringing his action of replevin, and by it, to replevy the goods, taken in execution there might be no end to the delays, which the defendant might thus create. Justice and the end of the law, would be effectually subdued; for, although, the defendant in the execution, and plaintiff, in the action of replevin, would fail upon the trial, and judgment would be rendered in favor of the officer, for the restoration of the goods; yet the action might be again and again renewed, and delays, without end, effected. To prevent such abuses, and such contempts of the authority of courts, to prevent the monstrous absurdity of rendering the remedies, afforded by law, with a view to redress wrongs, the means of defeating the very end to be accomplished; the defendant in an execution, who should thus pervert the action of replevin, might, and ought to be severely punished for contempt." Philips v. Harriss, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 122, 124, 19 AmD 166 [quot with appr Westenberger v. Wheaton, 8 Kan. 169]. (3) "It would be troubling the execution awarded if the party on whom the money was to be levied should patch back the goods by a replevin." Gilbert Replevin p 122.

[b] Rule applied.—(1) If a joint execution issues against the principal and surety, and before exhausting the effects of the principal, the officer levies on property of the surety subject to execution, replevin is not the proper remedy of the surety. Miller v. Hudson, 114 Ind. 550, 17 NE 122. (2) Where no payment is made to the officer levying an execution, and the claim is made, but disputed, that the payment has been made to the execution plaintiff, such officer should not be held liable in replevin on his refusal to release the levy. officer by the owner of the property,[84] and in a number of jurisdictions the replevin statutes have been held to permit the action in such case,[85] while in others the remedy is expressly provided by statutes.[86] These statutes of course have no application where plaintiff in replevin neither had nor was entitled to possession of the property at the time of the seizure under the execution.[87] Some jurisdictions, however, deny the right of a stranger to an execution to recover his property seized by an officer making the levy;[88]

[a] In Arkansas.—(1) The rule of the text has been followed (Morrison v. Berry, 170 Ark. 147, 278 SW 962; Maxey v. Cooper, 94 Ark. 296, 126 SW 842; Clayton v. Johnson, 36 Ark. 406, 38 AmR 40), (2) although the early cases are opposed (Spring v. Bourland, 11 Ark. 658, 54 AmD 243; Goodrich v. Fritz, 4 Ark. 525).

[b] In Missouri.—(1) The rule of the text applies. Belkin v. Hill, 53 Mo. 492; Talbot v. Magee, 59 Mo. A. 347; Hawk v. Applegate, 37 Mo. A. 32. (2) Under a local act in the county of St. Louis (Sess. Acts [1855] p 464), providing for the duties of the sheriff and marshal, and providing further for claims of persons whose property is seized on execution against another, it was held that where claim is made in accordance with the act, plaintiff cannot sue in replevin (Hambleton v. Lynch, 32 Mo. 259; St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Castello, 30 Mo. 124; Bradley v. Holloway, 28 Mo. 150); (3) but if claim is not so made, he may maintain the action (Bradley v. Holloway, supra). (4) However, it is now held that the taking of an indemnity bond from plaintiff by an officer, who has seized property under an execution, does not release the officer, nor plaintiff ordering or assenting to such action, from liability to a replevin suit by the owner of the property. Belkin v. Hill, 53 Mo. 492.

[c] In New York.—(1) The rule of the text has been followed in some cases (Stewart v. Wells, 6 Barb. 79; Allen v. Crary, 10 Wend. 349, 25 AmD 566; Dunham v. Wyckoff, 3 Wend. 280, 20 AmD 695; Clark v. Skinner, 20 Johns. 465, 11 AmD 302), (2) although some decisions seem to intimate that replevin will lie only when the property is taken from the possession of plaintiff in replevin (Johnson v. Carnley, 10 N. Y. 570, 61 AmD 762; Judd v. Fox, 9 Cow. 259; Gardner v. Campbell, 15 Johns. 401; Thompson v. Button, 14 Johns. 84), (3) or where at the time of the seizure plaintiff had the right to possession (Wise v. Grant, 140 N. Y. 593, 35 NE 1078). (4) Goods of a master or principal taken under an execution against his agent or servant while in the possession of the latter may be replevied. The chattels are deemed to be taken from the actual possession of plaintiff who was not the execution defendant, the possession of the servant or agent being the possession of the master or principal. Clark v. Skinner, 20 Johns. 465, 11 AmD 302. (5) If intermediate seizure and sale of A's property on execution against B, and a levy on a second execution is made on the property as belonging to A, A cannot maintain replevin therefor. Sharp v. Whittenhall, 3 Hill 576. (6) Replevin will lie by the owner of goods against a sheriff for the recovery of property, levied upon by him by virtue of an execution against a third person, the property at the time of the levy being in the possession of defendant in the execution, where such property, after the levy, came peacefully into the possession of the owner, and was retaken by the sheriff. Hall v. Tuttle, 2 Wend. 475.

[d] Reasons assigned for rule.—(1) The reasons for the rule, in respect to defendant in the execution, are not equally strong, in relation to those whose property may be seized under executions against others. The reason entirely fails, where an execution issues against A, and the officer levies on the property of B. It is a trespass, on the part of the officer, to seize property not owned by the defendant in the execution; and we perceive no reason founded in good policy, which should prevent the real owner from maintaining his action of replevin. Philips v. Harriss, 3 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 122, 19 AmD 166. (2) Where a stranger to the judgment and execution brings replevin, it is not to question or overhaul those proceedings, but to obtain redress for a trespass done to him; the judgment and execution set out in the avowry are res inter alios, and cannot affect his rights or his remedies. Clark v. Skinner, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 465, 11 AmD 302.

[e] Replevin against assignee of sheriff.—Where the goods of A, having been seized by the sheriff under an execution against B, had been handed over by the sheriff to an assignee, to whom B had made a voluntary assignment in insolvency, it was held that A might maintain replevin against the assignee as well as the sheriff. Wash.—Scott v. McGraw, 3 Wash. 675, 29 P 260.

[a] In Connecticut.—(1) It was held that the statute (Gen. St. tit 1 § 327) did not permit replevin of goods seized under execution. Howard v. Crandall, 39 Conn. 213. (2) Under a revision of the statute (Gen. St. tit 19 c 17 part 15 § 1) replevin will now lie. Hilton v. Osgood, 49 Conn. 110.

[b] In North Carolina.—(1) The statutes permit replevin of property seized under execution against another (Mitchell v. Sims, 124 N. C. 411, 32 SE 735; Churchill v. Lee, 77 N. C. 341; Jones v. Ward, 77 N. C. 337), (2) but under the earlier statutes the rule was otherwise (Carroll v. Hussey, 31 N. C. 89; McLeod v. Oates, 30 N. C. 387).

[c] Property in hands of bailee.—The owner of property seized in execution to satisfy a judgment against a third party may maintain an action of replevin against the officer, notwithstanding the property at the time of the commencement of the action is in the hands of his bailee. Ralston v. Black, 15 Iowa 47.

[d] Property left in hands of execution defendant.—If a sheriff, by direction of a plaintiff, who is present, levy on execution upon goods of another than the execution defendant, the goods being present and within his control, and he leave them in the custody of the execution defendant where he found them, upon his delivery bond, without surety, the owner may, under the statute, maintain replevin against both, although the sheriff or plaintiff personally have not actual possession of the goods at the commencement of the suit. In such case the execution defendant is a mere receiptor of the goods, and the possession is that of the sheriff. Hadley v. Hadley, 82 Ind. 95.

86. See statutory provisions.

[a] In Minnesota.—Under a statute expressly authorizing replevin of property seized under execution against another, plaintiff need not wait until the property is sold before bringing his action. Whitney v. Swensen, 43 Minn. 337, 45 NW 609.

87. Stapleford v. White, 6 Del. 238, (where the goods seized had been rented to defendant in execution to be returned on reasonable notice, and it appeared that no such notice had been given at the time of the seizure).

88. Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 4 SCt 355, 28 L. ed. 390; St. Paul, etc., R. Co. v. Drake, 72 Fed. 945, 19 CCA 252; Cromwell v. Owings, 7 Harr. & J. (Md.) 55; Kittredge v. Holt, 55 N. H. 621; Mitchell v. Roberts, 50 N. H. 486; Melcher v. Lamprey, 20 N. H. 403; Kellogg v. Churchill, 2 N. H. 412, 9 AmD 104. See also Hewitson v. Hunt, 42 S. C. L. 106 (where the remedy was denied on the ground that replevin lies only in cases of wrongful distress in South Carolina).

"If the goods were permitted to be taken from the hands of the officer by a writ of replevin, the rights of a creditor might always be defeated, by a mere stranger, having no right, since it could only be determined at the trial, and after the mischief was done, and the very object of the judgment disappointed, to whom the property belonged. And thus the law, by allowing process to defeat its own ends, would virtually close the door of justice against creditors seeking to while others permit replevin if the property seized was taken from the possession of plaintiff in replevin.[89] Where replevin of a stranger's property is allowed,[90] the action may be brought notwithstanding plaintiff in replevin was one of defendants in the former action, if the order of sale did not direct the seizure or sale of the property of such plaintiff, and was not issued against him.[91] Where replevin is not permitted,[92] it makes no difference whether or not the property was in the hands of defendant in execution at the time of the taking,[93] and it is a contempt of the court issuing an execution to replevy property taken under it whether by defendant in execution or any one else.[94] The remedy of the party aggrieved is an action of trespass or trover against the officer,[95] or replevin against the purchaser at a sale of the goods under the execution,[96] or to make claim for the property in accordance with statutory provisions therefor.[97]

[§ 30] (2) Property Owned in Common by Execution Debtor and Stranger to Execution. Where an officer levies on property owned in common by the execution debtor and a stranger to the execution, he has the right to take the entire property into his possession and the stranger to the execution cannot maintain replevin for the property.[98]

[§ 31] c. Property Sold under Execution.[99] Where chattels have been sold under execution they cease to be in the custody of the law and may be replevied by the true owner, whether defendant in the execution,[1] or one whose property has been sold under execution against another,[2] from the purchaser in possession[3] or his bailee who has actual custody of the chattels,[4] and no demand is necessary before bringing suit.[5] Goods remaining in possession of an officer who has sold them on execution after notice of ownership in a third person may be replevied from the officer.[6]

[§ 32] 3. Property Seized under Process of Attachment—a. Right of Defendant in Attachment To Bring Replevin.[7] The general rule is well settled that defendant in attachment cannot maintain replevin for the attached property against the officer making the seizure.[8] Nor can he replevy property enforce their judgments." Cromwell v. Owings, 7 Harr. & J. (Md.) 55, 60.

[a] In Mississippi.—(1) Under a statute providing that replevin shall not be maintained in any case of the seizure of property under execution or attachment when a remedy is given to claim the property by making claim to it in some mode provided by law, but the person claiming must resort to the specific mode prescribed in such case, and shall not resort to the action of replevin; replevin will not lie to recover property in the hands of the sheriffs under execution, the proper remedy being the interposition of a claim under another section which provides an exclusive remedy by claimant's issue. Bernheimer v. Martin, 66 Miss. 486, 6 S 326; Clark v. Clinton, 61 Miss. 337. (2) Under earlier statutes, one whose property was seized under execution against another might maintain replevin therefor against the officer seizing it. Saunders v. Jordan, 54 Miss. 428; Swain v. Alcorn, 50 Miss. 320; Yarborough v. Harper, 25 Miss. 112.

[b] In Pennsylvania.—(1) Under the statute (Act April 3, 1779) it is provided that all writs of replevin granted or issued for any owner of goods taken in execution by any officer, under the authority of the state are irregular, erroneous, and void. Under this statute it is held that property cannot be replevied. C. I. T. Corp. v. Shakespeare, 95 Pa. Super. 491 (where personal property was under levy when writ of replevin was issued, it is immaterial that property was not taken into possession by officer serving writ, or that there was postponement of sheriff's sale); Taylor v. Ellis, 200 Pa. 191, 49 A 946 [overr English v. Dalbrow, 1 Miles 160; Tufts v. Cole, 3 Kulp 436; Weed v. Hill, 2 Miles 122]; Yake v. Schmoll, 29 Pa. Dist. 107. (2) Under the statute replevin will not lie against the officer but only against his vendee. Shaw v. Levy, 17 Serg. & R. 99. (3) This statute does not apply where owner of property and not officer is defendant in replevin. Cortland Wagon Co. v. Landis, 9 Pa. Dist. 490.

[c] Under the statutes of Nova Scotia (1) a stranger to the execution whose goods are seized cannot maintain replevin against the sheriff. Carty v. Bonnett, 12 N. S. 293. (2) The rule was otherwise before the enactment of the statute. Ring v. Brennan, 2 N. S. 20.

[d] Replevin in state court of property seized under process of federal court.—(1) The possession by a marshal of a court of the United States of property by virtue of a levy under a writ of execution issued on a judgment recovered in a circuit court of the United States is a complete defense to an action in a state court of replevin of the property seized, without regard to its rightful ownership. Covell v. Heyman, 111 U. S. 176, 4 SCt 355, 28 L. ed. 390. (2) And it seems that vice versa the possession of property held by process issuing from state courts is protected against any disturbance under process of the courts of the United States, excepting of course those cases wherein the latter exercise jurisdiction for the purpose of enforcing the supremacy of the constitution and laws of the United States. He must seize the entire leviable property of the co-partnership. He must take and retain custody of the property, for in no other way can he legally execute the writ and sell as much of the interest of his judgment debtor as may be sufficient to satisfy the execution").

[a] Effect of special statutory provisions.—A statute which provides that "the action of replevin shall not be maintainable in any case of the seizure of property under execution or attachment when a remedy is given to claim the property in some mode prescribed by law" only forbids the institution of an action of replevin to recover property held by an officer by virtue of an execution or attachment, and does not forbid an action of replevin against a purchaser of the property at a sale under the execution. Nor does plaintiff's failure to present and prosecute his claim operate as a waiver of his right to maintain replevin. Armistead v. Bernard, 62 Miss. 180.

attached a second time after it had been left in his possession by the officer first attaching it.[9] And the fact that the property is in the possession of another, as the mere agent or depositary of the officer, will not render it any the less in the custody of the law.[10] So the rule applies, although defendant in attachment is misdescribed in the writ and has pleaded in abatement thereof,[11] or although the levy is voidable[12] or even void.[13] But where on final judgment the attachment is dissolved, replevin will lie on refusal of the officer to surrender the property.[14] Where by statute the sheriff may sell attached goods if they are perishable or expensive to keep,[15] goods so sold may not be replevied by defendant in the proceedings in which they were attached.[16]

[§ 33] b. Right of Stranger to Attachment To Bring Replevin[17]—(1) In General. While in some jurisdictions property seized under a writ of attachment against a third person is not subject to replevin from the officer by its owner,[18] and while it has been held that where an officer under a warrant of attachment seizes property in the possession of and owned by a person other than the one against whose property the warrant is issued, he is liable in an action of replevin to such person;[19] the weight of authority is that if an officer, in attempting to execute process of attachment, by mistake or design, takes goods not the property of defendant in such writ, he is a trespasser and acquires no right to the goods seized, and the injured party may have replevin for their recovery,[20] without regard to whether the property was taken from the possession of the party

[a] In Minnesota.—(1) An early decision followed the rule of the text. Caldwell v. Arnold, 8 Minn. 265. (2) Under a later case, however, it is held that a sheriff cannot take under replevin property which he is holding under prior writ of attachment (Farmers' State Bank v. Hammond, 170 Minn. 313, 212 NW 593), (3) but if attachment is released, it becomes the sheriff's duty to execute writ of replevin on attached property (Farmers' State Bank v. Hammond, supra).

[b] In Wisconsin.—(1) The rule of the text is generally followed. Commercial Inv. Trust v. Frankfurth Hardware Co., 179 Wis. 21, 190 NW 1004; Williams v. Morgan, 50 Wis. 548, 7 NW 541; Gallagher v. Bishop, 15 Wis. 276. (2) Where, however, a valid writ commands seizure of specific chattels to enforce a lien, they cannot be replevied. Irey v. Gorman, 118 Wis. 8, 94 NW 658; Union Lumbering Co. v. Tronson, 36 Wis. 126; Battis v. Hamlin, 22 Wis. 669; Griffith v. Smith, 22 Wis. 646, 99 AmD 90.

[c] Estoppel.—That a person was present and testified as a witness in an action, and knew at the time he testified that property which he claimed had been attached in the action, and that pending the action he brought suits in justices' courts for the property which he subsequently dismissed, did not estop him from maintaining replevin against the officer attaching the property. Hoover v. Lewin, 56 Ind. A. 367, 105 NE 400.

[d] Suit against officer and attaching creditor jointly.—The owner of property, attached in a suit against another, may maintain replevin therefor against the attaching creditor and the officer jointly, when the former assisted in taking the property, and took it into his own possession after the attachment. Esty v. Love, 32 Vt. 744.

[e] Effect of assignment to dissolve attachment.—Where goods are attached, one seeking to replevy them as owner, by virtue of a sale thereof to him by defendant in attachment, cannot claim that by reason of an assignment by defendant in attachment for the benefit of credi-claiming it or from defendant in attachment,[21] and in many jurisdictions this rule is provided expressly or impliedly by statute.[22] In any event, however, plaintiff must have the right to immediate possession,[23] although his ownership need not be absolute.[24] Although under a statute allowing one claiming to be the owner of goods attached to replevy them but providing further that judgment shall be rendered against him if he fail to make out title to them, plaintiff can recover only by proving ownership.[25] By statute in some jurisdictions the attaching creditors only may be sued in replevin.[26]

A tenant in common cannot replevy goods owned jointly and attached by a sheriff.[27]

[§ 34] (2) After Making Claim in Other Proceedings. Where one who claims property seized under attachment process against another institutes proceedings for the trial of the right of property and judgment is rendered against him, he cannot thereafter maintain replevin against the officer for the property.[28] However, the mere fact that he asks and obtains leave to interplead in the attachment suit will not bar his right to maintain replevin, where he does nothing more in the cause than this, and was not made a party to the action, nor any judgment rendered against him.[29]

[§ 35] 4. Property Seized under Writ of Replevin—a. When in Hands of Officer—(1) Right of Defendant or His Privies To Replevy. Property seized and in the hands of the officer under a writ of replevin cannot be replevied by defendant in replevin or his privies.[30] This rule is not affected by a stattors the attachment was dissolved. Josephi v. Furnish, 27 Or. 260, 41 P 424.

[f] Retention by officer after offer to give possession to plaintiff.—The owner of property attached as belonging to another may maintain replevin therefor, although on his demanding the property, the levying officer stated that he might have it if it was his, where the officer retained the same possession of the property after such statement as he had before. Wheeler v. Eaton, 67 N. H. 368, 39 A 901.

[g] Attachment no bar to replevin by same party.—The levy of an attachment on chattels as defendant's property does not prevent the party levying the attachment from subsequently seizing the same property in replevin as his own. There is no element of estoppel either of record or in pais. Anchor Milling Co. v. Walsh, 20 Mo. A. 107.

[h] Where a wife's property is attached in an action against her husband, she may recover it by an action in claim and delivery. Ex p. Sales, 126 S. C. 155, 117 SE 350.

[21] See cases supra note 20.

[b] Statutes held not to bar right.—(1) Statutes providing that where an officer levying on property has taken an indemnity bond from the levying creditor, a claimant of the property shall be barred of an action against the officer, relate solely to the protection of the officer when he levies an execution; they do not bar an action to recover possession of property taken under the levy of an attachment. Hall v. Ballou, 58 Iowa 585, 12 NW 475. (2) So notwithstanding statutes which provide that, where property is seized by execution or attachment, any party other than defendant may file a complaint with the justice, or, if the officer executing the writ has reason to believe that a third person has some claim to the property, he shall give notice to such party in writing that the property has been seized, and require him to assert his claim within twenty days thereafter; that a claimant of attached property shall prosecute his claim as in cases of property taken on execution, or be barred, yet where plaintiff's property was attached, and he had actual notice thereof, but before service of the notice by the officer he had commenced replevin for such property, he was entitled to continue such suit, since his right, under the statute, to file a complaint in the attachment suit was cumulative only, the notice of the attachment not having been given until the replevin was instituted. [a] Under the statutes of Connecticut (1) a writ of replevin to obtain the restoration of goods attached, in favor of a claimant who was not a party to the attachment, must be brought against the attaching creditor and cannot be sustained against the officer who served the attachment. Hathaway v. St. John, 20 Conn. 343 (likewise in this state the right of a person to replevy goods attached in a suit against another person, given by the eighth section of the statute authorizing writs of replevin, as revised in 1821, exists only in favor of the owner of the goods, who is required to make out a title thereto); Bowen v. Hutchins, 18 Conn. 550. (2) A person having a lien on goods attached in a suit against another person, who is the general owner, with no other interest therein, has not such a title to the property as will, under the statute, enable him to maintain an action of replevin. [a] Rule applied.—(1) An officer's failure to secure a replevin bond from plaintiff before delivering an automobile to plaintiff's attorney does not make the action wrongful, nor enable defendant to maintain replevin therefor, either in this state or the state in which the former replevin was prosecuted. Krebs v. Sawyer, 162 Iowa 593, 144 NW 345. (2) A debtor mortgaged his stock of goods to a creditor in his individual capacity and as trustee for other creditors, and then sold the goods to a stranger to the mortgage. Certain of the unsecured creditors of the mortgagor replevied a portion of the goods, joining the mortgagor, the mortgagee, and the vendee as defendants, after which certain of the secured creditors, having received from the mortgagee an assignment of their interest in the mortgage, replevied the goods from the sheriff. It was held that the latter action was a cross replevin. Had the mortgagee brought the action it would have been a cross replevin. It was brought by persons in privity with him and is open to the same objection. Simon v. Leland, 105 Mich. 226, 63 NW 76.

[b] Joinder of other parties in second suit.—(1) B brought suit in replevin against F, who was a member of a firm, and N, who was its agent and in possession of the property, replevied. The firm then brought replevin against B, and joined three other defendants with him, for the same property delivered to ute providing that when any goods or chattels attached on any writ of mesne or final process are claimed by any other person he may maintain replevin therefor.[31] In support of the rule it is said that the law is not so inconsistent as to issue to its officers, compelled to act at their peril, commands wholly incompatible with each other;[32] that if such a proceeding were permitted, there would be no end to suits and the benefit of that action could never be realized;[33] and that in any event such a proceeding is wholly unnecessary, as the rights of both parties can be fully determined in the first suit.[34] In some jurisdictions the statutes expressly prohibit a cross replevin.[35] These statutes have been held to be a reiteration of the common law.[36] Where, however, no process has ever been served on defendant, owner of the property seized in replevin, he may bring replevin for the return of the property.[37]

[§ 36] (2) Right of Stranger to Writ To Replevy. It is a very generally accepted doctrine that at common law property in the hands of an officer, which has been seized under a writ of replevin, cannot be taken on another writ of replevin pending suit even by a stranger to the first writ.[38] In some jurisdictions under the statutes however, a stranger to the writ may maintain replevin,[39] and it has been held that a right so conferred by statute is not affected by the fact that under the provisions of another statute he might have intervened in the first action and set up his title to the property, the view being taken that the remedy by intervention is not exclusive.[40]

An officer having possession of the property involved under a writ of execution may maintain replevin against another officer who subsequently seizes the same property under a writ of replevin.[41]

[§ 37] b. Where Property Has Been Delivered to Plaintiff in Replevin. Some decisions lay down the rule without qualification, that property taken under a writ of replevin, although delivered into the possession of plaintiff in replevin, is still in the custody of the law, plaintiff's custody being substituted for that of the officer,[42] and cannot be seized under any judicial process whatever,[43] and that defendant or his grantees or privies cannot maintain replevin for such property.[44] However, in many jurisdictions, after property has been delivered to plaintiff in replevin, it may be taken from him in another action of replevin by a third person who is a stranger to the parties to the first suit,[45] and it

B upon the first writ, and the only question in both suits was whether B or the firm were the owners of the property. It was held that the second suit was a cross replevin, and could not be maintained. That the parties in the second suit are not identical with those in the first suit is not important, unless the new parties claim some interest in the property, or right thereto, different from or independent of the parties to the first suit. Fisher v. Busch, 64 Mich. 180, 31 NW 39. (2) So a second suit in replevin brought by defendant in the first jointly with his partner against the bailees of plaintiff in the first is a cross replevin and cannot be maintained. It is none the less cross replevin because the partner of defendant in the second suit is joined as coplaintiff, nor because the suit is brought against the bailees of plaintiff in the first suit. Beers v. Wuerpul, 24 Ark. 272.

[a] Reason for rule.—"The distinction between goods taken on execution and by replevin is marked. In the latter case the identical goods are in the custody of the law, and are before the court to be disposed of as it shall see proper, and the proceeding is so far in rem that the goods cannot be seized upon any process until the court shall have taken action. If, therefore, a party finds his goods in the hands of an officer upon a valid writ of replevin, his remedy is by application to the court to be permitted to come in and set up his claim to them, and not by an independent replevin. Whereas, if goods are wrongfully seized by execution, it cannot be said to confer any lien on them, or to bear any resemblance to a proceeding in rem." Wells Replevin, § 257 [quot with appr Weiner v. has been held that this right is not affected by a statute which makes provision for trial of the right of property before the sheriff or the judge, that on the contrary the remedy so conferred by statute is merely cumulative.[46]

Property in the hands of an agent, and replevied from his custody, may be replevied from plaintiff by the real owner when not a party to the original action,[47] although the contrary has been held.[48]

Where property has been sold by plaintiff in replevin. Although one who brings a replevin suit and gives bond to prosecute the same acquires the right of possession pending suit, the property in the goods seized does not absolutely vest in him, so that he can sell the property, and where the suit abates by his death the right of possession acquired temporarily by him ceases, and the rightful owner may maintain replevin for the property against one to whom plaintiff in replevin sold it pending the suit.[49]

[§ 38] c. Where Property is Retained by Defendant. When property has been seized by a sheriff, by virtue of a writ of replevin issued out of a state court, and released to defendant upon a forthcoming bond, it is still in the custody of the state court, to abide the result of the replevin suit, and not subject to seizure by the marshal under a writ of replevin subsequently issued out of a United States court, at the suit of the United States.[50] Nor can a plaintiff in replevin disturb the property in the hands of a defendant by another action of replevin.[51]

[§ 39] d. Right of Plaintiff To Maintain Second Replevin. Independently of a statute prohibiting the bringing of replevin for the recovery of property in custodia legis, a party at whose suit property has been seized by an officer cannot bring another suit to take the property out of his possession.[52] Plaintiff in replevin has no right to maintain a second suit in replevin against the same parties for the same goods, while the first suit is pending.[53] But where the replevin action has been dismissed, plaintiff may maintain a second action.[54]

[§ 40] e. Replevin after Judgment in Replevin. After judgment against defendant in replevin he cannot sue out another writ of replevin to prevent execution against himself and to procure a restoration of the property to himself.[55] A judgment in replevin against a defendant does not estop a stranger to that action from replevying the property from the successful party to the former action.[56]

[§ 41] 5. Property Seized in Satisfaction of Fines. The general rule is that property seized by an officer for the collection of a fine is in the custody of the law and the owner cannot maintain replevin against him to recover such property.[57] The rule does not apply, however, where the warrant is issued on a void judgment.[58] And where property is seized and sold for a fine under a judgment void for want of jurisdiction the party against whom the fine was recovered and whose property was sold in satisfaction thereof may contest the purchaser's title

[a] Reason for rule.—"This is manifestly the true rule, for otherwise the true owner or a creditor of the true owner would be kept out of his own while a replevin suit was pending, and to which he or they were not parties, over which he had no control and by the judgment in which his rights could in no manner be affected, impaired, or taken away, and which could not determine the title or claim of such owner or his creditor. No principle of law can be found to justify a rule which would thus postpone, at least, and might impair or effectually destroy, the rights of third persons. The common reason given for such holding, that if third persons could take the property from the possession of one of the parties to the replevin suit, he would be disabled from returning the property in case he lost his suit, and might have to pay his adversary in that suit the assessed value of the property, and still not have the property, is more specious than substantial or right. The same result would follow if his adversary elected to take the assessed value and gave him his title to the property, and the true owner thereafter, after the termination of the replevin suit, seized the property. The fallacy in the reason so given, lies in failing to observe that the judgment in the replevin suit only settles the controversy between the parties to that suit, and does not affect the rights of persons not parties to that suit." Mohr v. Langan, 162 Mo. 474, 63 SW 409, 414, 85 AmSR 503.

[b] Effect of agreement by plaintiff in replevin to waive actual delivery.—If plaintiff in replevin agrees to dispense with actual delivery of the property taken under the writ and to consider it delivered, a third person may replevy the property, as plaintiff in the first replevin will be precluded by the agreement from objecting that the property is in the custody of the law. Property Seized for Forfeiture under Revenue Laws. Where property has been seized for forfeiture thereof for a breach of the revenue laws, it is in the custody of the law and cannot be replevied from the collector.[60] The rule has no application, however, where there is no law by virtue of which the property could be seized.[61]

And where intoxicating liquors are seized on a warrant against one person at a place described therein, charged to be maintained in violation of the liquor laws, a third person may maintain replevin therefor against the officer making the seizure for the purpose of determining his right thereto.[73]

Necessity and Sufficiency of Right to Possession. As replevin is strictly a possessory action,[78] it lies only in behalf of one entitled to possession.[79] Not only must plaintiff have the right to possession generally, but he must have the right to immediate[80] as well as the right to exclusive pos-

[a] Illustrations.—(1) One, agreeing to transport statutes after being carved and arranging with another to perform such undertaking, has such right of possession on the other's failure to perform, as would support replevin. Thompson-Starrett Co. v. Plunkett, 89 Vt. 177, 94 A 845. (2) If plaintiff, seeking to recover an automobile seized by the sheriff as the property of another, had merely a contract for purchase from still another party with the right of possession, until such right was forfeited for noncompliance with the terms of sale, it would be ample to sustain the action as against defendant. Rahis v. McLeod, 45 Nev. 380, 204 P 501. (3) Where a lease reserves title to the crop in the landlord, and the tenant agrees therein not to sell or remove it until a division thereof, without written consent of the landlord, and the tenant proceeds to dispose of the crop without fulfilling the terms of the lease and asserts title thereto superior and adverse to that of the landlord, the landlord is entitled to recover the crop in replevin. [a] Rule applied.—(1) To recover possession of an automobile which plaintiff claimed as the result of a drawing contest, a prior delivery of possession of the automobile to plaintiff was an essential element to sustain his claim of ownership by reason of either sale or gift, and without this he had no title. Patton v. Heath, 190 N. C. 586, 130 SE 500. (2) Where the automobile which plaintiff won in a contest for newspaper subscriptions was not delivered to him, he could not maintain replevin; but, where it was delivered with the consent of the party selling it to the newspaper and participating in the scheme, he could recover. Jones v. Burks, 110 Ark. 108, 161 SW 177. (3) Merchants conducting a prize contest could maintain an action in replevin for possession of an automobile mistakenly awarded to a contestant without the highest number of votes. Amlie Strand Hardware Co. v. Moose, 176 Minn. 598, 224 NW 158. (4) A tobacco inspector in a public warehouse, who delivers wrong goods on receipt of notes cannot afterward replevy the property, for which the notes were issued, from his successor as the surrender of the notes transferred no property. Stevenson v. Ridgeley, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 281. (5) Where there is no delivery of notes to the payee and no title thereto vests in him, he cannot maintain replevin against a third party in whose hands the maker has placed the notes with instructions not to deliver them until so directed by the maker. Nichols, etc., Co. v. Hillsboro First Nat. Bank, 6 N. D. 404, 71 NW 135. (6) Where defendant's agent forged defendant's signature as indorser to notes and made new forged notes exact duplicates of the true notes which defendant indorsed believing them genuine, the indorsee could not replevin the true notes, the delivery of the false notes not having been a valid transference vesting legal title in the indorsee in view of Negotiable Instruments Act, § 16. Horn v. Nicholas, 139 Tenn. 453, 201 SW 756 (nor can the indorsee replevin the true notes on the theory of constructive delivery). (7) When plaintiff, who leased equipment to defendant for use upon a government job, and knew there was an agreement that, when the rentals paid equaled the fixed value, the equipment was to pass to the government and received rentals until the aggregate equaled the price so fixed, he could not maintain replevin. Barry v. Feeney, etc., Bldg. Co., 190 App. Div. 26, 179 NYS 662. (8) A holder of a mere option had no such property right as would entitle him to maintain replevin. Young v. Matthew Turner Co., 168 Cal. 671, 143 P 1029. (9) The mere indorsement of notes, stipulating that ownership and title to property therein described shall remain in the payee until the notes are paid, does not vest title to such property in the indorsee, so as to enable him to sue in replevin therefor. Malsby v. Gamble, 61 Fla. 310, 327, 54 S 766; Roof v. Chattanooga Wood Split Pulley Co., 36 Fla. 284, 18 S 597. (10) A buyer of goods, whereof a seller holds the warehouse receipts, acquires no interest sufficient to support replevin action under an oral contract invalid under statute of frauds. W. F. Hall Printing Co. v. Wells Warehouse, etc., Co., 241 Ill. A. 146. (11) If the acts and declarations relied on by plaintiff to prove a sale were merely colorable and not intended to pass any title or possession to him he cannot maintain replevin. Dawson v. Wetherbee, 16 Gray (Mass.) 123. (12) In replevin for automobile purchased by a third person with funds furnished by plaintiff, if plaintiff gave the money to the third person to buy the car for himself plaintiff cannot recover. McClemy v. Brown, 29 Del. 253, 99 A 48. (13) In replevin for automobile purchased by third person with funds furnished by plaintiff, if he received the money from her to buy the car for her, the title and right of possession vested in her. McClemy v. Brown, supra.

[b] Ownership in plaintiff is material only so far as it is necessary to show the right to possession. Schlessinger v. Cook, 9 Wyo. 256, 62 P 152.

[c] Whether the right is absolute or for purposes of security, is immaterial. Brammell v. Hart, 12 Heisk. (Tenn.) 366.

[d] Property acquired through robbery or theft is not recoverable by him in replevin; Crawford & M. Dig. c 169 §§ 10240a–10240c, declaring that title cannot be obtained by such means. Carden v. Swagger, (Ark.) 238 SW 31.

[e] Where the right to possession depends on a legal title, plaintiff must have the legal title to maintain replevin. Daniel v. Daniel, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 230; Fisher v. Alsten, 186 Mass. 549, 72 NE 78; Leete v. St. Louis State Bank, 141 Mo. 584, 42 SW 927.

[f] Bidder at a public sale, whose bid was accepted under a mutual agreement, conditional on furnishing note and surety, and who never was given possession, has no title so as to maintain replevin. Day v. Evanston, 64 SW 749, 23 KyL 1099.

though there is authority to the contrary.[96] So where the right of immediate possession is in one and the title or ownership is in another, the former may maintain replevin against the latter.[97] On the other hand, the holder of the legal title cannot sue where he has not a right of immediate possession,[98] but the fact that the owner is not entitled to possession as against one person will not preclude his action against another not claiming under him.[99] The fact that a third person may have some interest in the property will not preclude replevin by one having the right to possession.[1] Wrongful possession by plaintiff cannot be made the basis of an action of replevin,[2] although it has been held that plaintiff may replevy from a wrongdoer, even though having obtained possession under an illegal transaction.[3]

[§ 48] 2. Equitable Title or Interest. While in some jurisdictions an equitable title is insufficient,[4] in others the contrary rule prevails,[5] and actual possession and an equitable interest has been held sufficient.[6]

the right to possession is essential,[8] it may be stated generally that where plaintiff establishes his right to possession, through some general or special ownership, and where he does not base his right on mere naked possession, it is not necessary that he have ever had actual possession of the property,[9] although it has been held that plaintiff must have actual possession,[10] at least when he has only a special property in the goods.[11]

[a] The fact that other parties have an ultimate interest in an accounting for the proceeds of the property does not affect the right of plaintiff to maintain his action, where he

trary has been held.[18] One partner cannot replevy property from the bailee of the other partner.[19] A surviving partner, being entitled to the firm property, may replevy it from the administrator of his deceased partner.[20] Under a statute which prevents replevin of attached property by defendants in attachment the partners cannot replevy property on the ground that it is partnership property when some of the partners are defendants in attachment.[21]

[§ 52] 2. Joint Tenants and Tenants in Common.[22] To enable one to maintain an action of replevin, his right to the possession must be exclusive.[23] Therefore, as a general rule, where a personal chattel is owned by several persons, one part owner cannot maintain replevin for it.[24] All the owners must unite in the action,[25] for the reason that all joint owners, unless there is an agreement to the contrary, by reason of which plaintiff has a right to possession against the other part owners,[26] are equally entitled to the possession of the property, and neither has the right to the immediate and exclusive possession of the same as against the other.[27] One tenant in common,[28] or joint owner,[29] cannot sustain replevin against his cotenant nor against one to whom such cotenant has transferred the property;[30] nor against a stranger in possession.[31] However, it has been held that the bare fact that plaintiff does not alone own the property, is no bar to replevin against a stranger.[32] The doctrine above stated, that one joint owner cannot sustain replevin against his coöwner, applies more particularly to a single piece of property, or to things in their nature so far indivisible that the share of one is not susceptible of delivery without the whole.[33] But it does not obtain where the property is absolutely alike in quality and value, and is readily divisible by measurement or weight.[34] And where one repudiates the other's interest in property susceptible of division,[35] or takes possession of the common property and converts it to his own use,[36] the other may bring replevin for his share. Where plaintiff must have the right to possession at the time of the taking,[37] property in himself and another will prevent the action, even though he alone have property in himself at the time of issuance of the writ.[38] A joint owner having sole possession may replevy from one whose right is not superior to his.[39] One to whom a joint owner sells the property cannot replevy it so as to deprive the cotenant of the right of possession.[40]

[§ 53] 3. Purchaser at Sale under Process or Distress Proceedings.[41] One who has purchased personal property at an execution sale may maintain replevin against the execution debtor,[42] even though the sale was in some respects irregular,[43] and a purchaser of land at an execution or foreclosure sale may maintain replevin for timber, crops, or machinery detached from the realty after the sale;[44] but not where they were detached before the sale.[45] Replevin cannot be maintained where another person has the right to possession.[46] The purchaser of an undivided interest of personalty may maintain the action after the officer has divided the property and delivered one half to him,[47] but one who has purchased merely the interest of a partner in the firm property may not, as he is not entitled to possession.[48]

[§ 54] 4. Assignee, Consignee, or Pledgee. An assignee,[49] or consignee,[50] has sufficient interest in the property to maintain replevin against a trespasser, or against an officer levying to satisfy a subordinate lien on the property. The assignee of a mortgage of an undivided interest cannot, however, because not entitled to exclusive right to possession.[51] A pledgee deprived of his possession by attachment of property by a creditor of his pledgor is entitled to recover it.[52]

V. TAKING, DETENTION, OR POSSESSION BY DEFENDANT

[By Joseph W. Rouse]

[§ 55] A. Wrongful Taking. At common law a writ of replevin lies only where there has been a tortious or wrongful taking of the property by defendant,[53] with the exception of cattle distrained damage feasant, where before impounding sufficient amends were tendered;[54] and it will not lie for a mere detention where the property was lawfully obtained.[55] Herein it is distinguishable from detinue which was the common-law action to obtain the property where defendant came rightfully into possession and the detention only was wrongful.[56] Any unlawful interference with or assertion of control over the property is sufficient without an actual forcible dispossession,[57] although an actual taking or detention has been held necessary.[58] Where property was secured through fraud its taking was wrongful ab

[§ 56] B. Wrongful Detention—1. Detention without Wrongful Taking. The common-law rule[60] has, in most, if not all, jurisdictions been changed by statutes.[61] The effect of which permit the action to be brought whenever property is unlawfully detained, although the original taking was lawful.[62] These statutes have been held not to be retroactive.[63]

[§ 57] 2. Necessity of Wrongful Detention. The detention of goods is a material fact necessary to maintain an action of replevin. A mere unlawful taking not followed by detention will not sustain the action.[64]

[§ 58] C. Possession of Defendant—1. Necessity for Actual or Constructive Possession—a. General Rule. The general rule is well established that, in order to maintain replevin, it is essential that defendant should have either actual or constructive possession of the property sued for at the time suit was commenced, so that he may make delivery thereof to plaintiff if judgment be rendered against him.[65] Thus the action does not lie where defendant never

"Possession essential to support an action is to be determined by reference to the time the action was instituted, and not by reference to the time the writ is served." Leavel v. Johnston, 209 Mo. A. 197, 232 SW 1064, 1069.

[a] Illustrations.—(1) Replevin would not lie against an indorser on a note given for the purchase price of mules, where the mules were not sold to him, and he never had them in his possession, or under his control. Starks v. Couch, 109 Ark. 534, 160 SW 853. (2) Where plaintiff knew that at the time of the institution of the action one of two horses had died, the value of the animal which died while in defendants' possession cannot be recovered. Nielsen v. Hyland, 51 Utah 334, 170 P 778. (3) Replevin will not lie against a justice who rendered judgment and issued the execution under which the property was seized but who was never either actually or constructively in possession of the property. Without this replevin does not lie. Fruits v. Elmore, 8 Ind. A. 278, 34 NE 829.

[b] Subsequent release of property after refusal.—Replevin does not lie for an animal which defendant refused to deliver where he drove the animal from his premises before the writ was issued. Rogers v. Davis, 21 Mo. A. 150.

[c] Joint possession.—(1) A bank has such control over its vaults, in which a safe deposit box is kept, that its possession and that of a minor, claiming the box and in possession of the key, is joint, and claim and delivery is an appropriate action. Lamus v. Engwicht, 39 Cal. A. 523, 179 P 435. (2) Where one defendant exercised acts of ownership and was a joint wrongdoer with co-defendant in detaining the property, both may be sued jointly. Sibeck v. McTiernan, 94 Ark. 1, 125 SW 136.

[d] A landlord cannot be sued in replevin by a third person for property of his tenant. Bonnell v. Ferris, (N. S.) [1929] 1 DomLR 540.

[e] In Idaho (1) under the common law, replevin would not lie against a defendant who had parted with the possession of the chattel prior to the commencement of the action. Bates v. Capital State Bank, 21 Ida. 141, 121 P 561. (2) But under claim and delivery statutes, for the purpose of avoiding a multiplicity of suits, an action may be maintained to recover personalty, although defendant has not the possession of it at the commencement of the action. Bates v. Capital State Bank, supra.

[a] Rule applied.—Aber v. [§ 59] b. Exceptions to Rule. In many jurisdictions the rule requiring that defendant be in actual or constructive possession at the time the action is brought[75] is subject to the exception that one in possession of property without right cannot avoid the action of replevin by wrongfully parting with or disposing of the property before the suit is brought.[76] This rule has been denied in some states.[77] The doctrine, has never been extended to cases where defendant before suit brought did not part with possession by any act on his part, but the property was taken from him by process of law valid on its face which he cannot resist.[78] Another exception is that when defendant has the property in his possession at the time the action is commenced, he cannot by the subsequent transfer or destruction of the property wholly deprive plaintiff of relief, and in such case the alternative judgment for the value of the property is granted.[79]

[§ 60] 2. Sufficiency of Constructive Possession. Possession by defendant need not be actual; a constructive possession is sufficient.[80] Replevin will lie for personal property, although not in the actual possession of defendant, if it be under his control in the hands of another.[81]

(2) So the fraudulent vendee of goods and his assignee thereof for the benefit are liable to a joint action in replevin by the vendor to recover possession. Nichols v. Michael, 23 N. (3) And in replevin against an agent for the sale of plaintiff's horses and another, to whom, without authority, such agent had traded the horses, it was held error to dismiss the complaint as against defendant agent, although it appeared on the trial that he had parted with possession of the property in suit. Jones v. Richards, 50 Misc. 645, 98 NYS 698.

[b] Rule applied.—Where an execution was given a sheriff, and he gave it to a constable who served it, and turned the property over to the sheriff, who never made a valid levy, and the owner brought replevin against the constable, not knowing of the transfer to the sheriff, she could recover against the constable, although he was not in actual possession. Anderson v. Boneman, 199 Mich. 532, 165 NW 830.

[c] Reason for rule.—(1) In New York the reason assigned was that on such a state of facts detinue would lie at common law (Nichols v. Michael, 23 N. Y. 264, 272, 80 AmD 259 [cit Garth v. Howard, 8 Bing. 451, 21 ECL 616, 131 Reprint 468, 5 C. & P. 346; 24 ECL 599, 172 Reprint 1005; Jones v. Dowle, 9 M. & W. 19, 152 Reprint 9), (2) and that by the statutes the action of detinue was abolished and the action of replevin extended so as to serve all the purposes of both actions (Nichols v. Michael, 23 N. Y. 264, 80 AmD 259).

[d] In support of the expediency of the rule it has been said: "That would be a very inconvenient rule, which would enable one who had wrongfully taken or detained property from the owner to refuse to deliver, and hold to the last moment before the writ, and then evade a suit by a transfer of possession. His successor might do the same; and his after him; and so on toties quoties, until the costs of writs to the owner would consume the property." Harkey v. Tillman, 40 Ark. 551, 555.

Coomer v. Gale Mfg. Co., 40 Mich. 691. (2) A principal's constructive possession of goods in the hands of his agent or bailee is sufficient to entitle the owner to maintain replevin against the principal. Krebs Hop Co. v. Taylor, 52 Or. 627, 97 P 44, 98 P 494. (3) Where the owner of the property filed a third party claim, and the sheriff holding it under the writ demanded, and plaintiff as attaching creditor furnished, an indemnifying bond, it was always within the power of plaintiff to release the property by so instructing the sheriff, and thus having the ostensible and actual control of the property, he was consequently liable for any damages for its wrongful detention. Taylor v. Bernheim, 58 Cal. A. 404, 209 P 55.

[b] Defendant is not in constructive possession (1) where the property was in the hands of the constable under directions from plaintiff to return to defendant, after the dismissal of plaintiff's prior suit in the

[§ 61] 3. Possession of Particular Classes of Defendants—a. Officer Who Has Sold Property under Execution. It has been held that an action of replevin does not lie against an officer who has sold goods seized under execution and parted with possession before the commencement of the action.[82] The contrary has also been held[83] and replevin will lie when the officer, after receiving notice of ownership, sells the property,[84] and also for the recovery of the property sold, even though there was no actual possession taken thereof by the sheriff or purchaser at the time of or after the sale.[85]

[§ 62] b. Officer Who Has Levied on but Not Taken Possession of Property. While it has been held that a levy on property is such an exercise of dominion over it as to sustain replevin against the officer, although there was no actual removal of the property,[86] generally where property levied on is not taken out of the actual possession of plaintiff in replevin, nor the possession in any way interfered with, it has been held that the action cannot be maintained,[87] although an inventory and appraisal is made of the property,[88] and although a receipt[89] or delivery bond[90] is given to defendant for the property. When, however, the officer's possession is such that, if interfered with, he could maintain replevin, the owner of the property levied on may replevy it, although the officer is not in actual possession.[91] Thus, where a sheriff levies on property of a stranger to an execution, and on the owner giving a delivery bond allows him to retain possession, the sheriff has such constructive possession as will justify replevin against him by the owner.[92] And where property of one person is levied on as the property of another who is allowed to remain in the possession thereof, there is no such restoration to the rightful owner as will estop him from bringing an action of replevin.[93]

[§ 63] c. Execution or Attachment Creditor. Where property has been seized under execution or attachment, replevin against the execution or attachment creditor does not lie whether by defendant in execution or attachment or a third person claiming the property seized,[94] although the contrary has been held,[95] and in some jurisdictions an action of replevin to recover goods attached in favor of a claimant who was not a party to the attachment must be brought against the attaching creditor and cannot be brought against the officer who served the attachment.[96] The actual possession of the property by an officer is not constructive possession of the creditor, under whose direction the officer had seized the goods on execution; but until they pass out of the officer's control by sale on the execution or other legal means, they are regarded as in the custody of the law and in no way subject to the creditor's control.[97]

session,[98] and it has been held that he will still have such possession as to make him liable to the action, although he has placed the property in the custody of a third person.[99] It has also been held that replevin will lie against any person wrongfully in actual physical possession of property, although he be holding it for another,[1] although there is authority to the effect that replevin will not lie against a mere servant who refuses to deliver property which he holds for his master who lawfully acquired possession.[2] Possession by a tenant of defendant is sufficient to support an action against defendant.[3]

[§ 65] 4. Estoppel to Deny Possession. Where defendants in replevin secured possession of the property by giving a forthcoming and delivery bond, they are estopped to deny that the property was in their possession at the time of the levy of the writ,[4] although it has been held otherwise where defendant never had possession or any control over the goods.[5] It is only on the assumption that the property was taken from his possession that he was entitled to demand its return.[6] So, where plaintiff in replevin alleges defendant to be in possession of the property and detaining the same from him, he is estopped from denying defendant's possession at the time of action brought.[7] Defendant is likewise estopped from claiming that less property was replevied than was described in the bond;[8] but the giving of a redelivery bond where the property claimed is indefinite in amount is not conclusive on defendant as to the amount.[9] Defendant is not estopped from denying that the property taken from him was the property described in plaintiff's complaint,[10] nor from showing the true amount and value of the goods.[11] An officer, by agreeing with plaintiff that property actually in another's possession should be considered to be in the possession of the officer for the purpose of replevin, is estopped from denying possession.[12]

[§ 66] 5. Effect of Voluntary Surrender of Property by Plaintiff. Where one voluntarily surrenders property to another believing, although erroneously, that the latter is legally entitled to it, he cannot maintain replevin therefor.[13]

Taylor v. Mills, 148 N. C. 415, 62 SE 556. (2) And where, pending a dispute over the cost of constructing a building, plaintiff, at defendants' request, furnished them with certain vouchers, a general statement of expenditures, and an affidavit of its correctness made by his bookkeeper, it was held that these papers were furnished for inspection only and that defendants did not become owners thereof and that plaintiff might recover them in an action of replevin. Drake v. Auerbach, 37 Minn. 505, 35 NW 367. (3) The delivery by a lienor, fraudulently induced by means of a worthless check, is no bar to replevin. Fox v. Magaw, 12 Pa. Dist. 53.

VI. CONDITIONS PRECEDENT[14]

[By Joseph W. Rouse]

[§ 67] A. In General. Since in order to maintain an action of replevin plaintiff must be entitled to the immediate possession of the property,[15] he must as a condition precedent make payment or tender of any money or performance of any other condition or obligation which may be necessary to vest in him such right of possession;[16] while on the other hand, although there may be something due from plaintiff to defendant, if its return or payment is not essential to vest in plaintiff a right to the possession of the property in question, no tender or payment is necessary as a condition precedent to the right to maintain the action.[17] Where payment or tender is a condition precedent, it must be made before the action is commenced,[18] unless, by reason of the defendant claiming absolute ownership, the cause of action is complete without such payment or tender;[19] and must be kept good up to and at the time of the trial.[20] Where plaintiff has parted with property under circumstances which entitle him to recover the same, he must return or tender the money, notes, or other thing of value which was the consideration on which he acted in parting with such property,[21] unless he is prevented from so doing by defendant.[22] Where expenses have been incurred by an officer in regard to property taken under a wrongful levy, the owner may replevy the same without tendering the amount so expended.[23] If plaintiff's property has been sold to defendant by a third person having no right to dispose of it, it is not necessary for him to refund to defendant the amount paid by the latter to such third person.[24] Where property is obtained by fraud on plaintiff's borrowing a sum of money from defendant to be repaid in a certain time which has not yet expired, no tender of the sum need be made.[25]

Liens. Where the party in possession has a lien on the property, a tender of an amount sufficient to discharge such lien is a condition precedent to the right of the owner to maintain replevin for such property,[26] unless such lien is waived,[27] or unless defendant has indicated that tender would be useless.[28]

A bill of lading must be surrendered[29] or its negotiation enjoined,[30] before goods may be replevied from a carrier issuing the bill on delivery of the goods.

Necessity for notice of ownership. If a statute provides that notice of ownership must be given to the officer who seized property under execution prior to bringing suit, this requirement must be complied with or the suit cannot be maintained.[31]

[§ 68] B. Demand and Refusal—1. Necessity for Demand[32]—a. In General. While it has been said that the decisions as to the necessity of a demand for a surrender of the property in question as a condition precedent to an action of replevin are in conflict and not entirely reconcilable;[33] the general rule is that no demand need be made except where it is necessary to terminate a right of possession in defendant or to confer such right upon plaintiff,[34] or in other words when necessary to establish an unlawful taking or detention as against the rights of the true owner,[35] and wherever this may be otherwise shown no demand is necessary.[36] In some jurisdictions it has been held that no demand is necessary in replevin in any case.[37]

Hinshaw v. Thornhill, (Mo. A.) 27 SW (2d) 776.

[b] That defendant would have refused to deliver the property on which he has a lien if the amount due had been tendered will not excuse the failure to make such tender, since plaintiff in order to maintain the action must have a right of immediate possession, and if the lien is not waived it must be discharged before plaintiff can have such right. Discontinuance after demand, does not necessitate a new demand on commencement of another action of replevin.[38]

[§ 69] b. Property Lawfully Taken by, or in Possession of, Defendant. The general rule is that replevin will not lie against one who has obtained possession of the property lawfully until a proper demand is made for the same, and possession refused,[39] since the law presumes, in the absence of any rebutting circumstances, that property which has come rightfully into the possession of defendant and which he is not entitled to retain will be surrendered to the person entitled thereto upon demand,[40] and he should be given an opportunity to do so before being subjected to the expense and inconvenience of an action.[41] This rule has been applied to actions against a bailee,[42] an assignee for the benefit of creditors,[43] a depository of an instru-

Jones v. Keebey, 159 Ark. 586, 252 SW 591. (2) Under an executory land contract, a written notice of forfeiture or demand for the surrender of personal property which plaintiff claimed was sold with the land by oral agreement was a prerequisite to an action to recover possession thereof. Myers v. Sawvel, 219 Mich. 252, 189 NW 88. (3) Under a contract for the sale of a mine, which provided that, on breach of conditions the contract should be forfeited, including all tools, machinery, and equipment of every kind on the premises, where the purchaser in anticipation of a forfeiture removed the tools from the property, plaintiffs' subsequent seizure thereof without the purchaser's consent did not confer on them any legal title authorizing them to sue in replevin without demand, although they might have a valid claim thereto under the sale contract. Albright v. Browne, 55 Or. 599, 107 P 458 (where in anticipation of forfeiture, the buyer sold the goods to B, who stored them in a cabin belonging to another, and the sellers, obtaining title to the cabin or securing authority from the owner, placed a lock on the door thereof, such acts did not give the sellers lawful possession of the goods, so that they could maintain replevin against B without demand). (4) Where a school teacher purchased a piano for the benefit of a school, and, while the school was closed, permitted a local grange to use it, the town's right to recover it in replevin did not accrue until demand for its return. Grand Isle v. McGowan, 88 Vt. 140, 92 A 6.

[b] Abandoned property.—Where a stranger removes to a blacksmith's shop a blanket apparently abandoned, and the blacksmith after several months loans it to one who does not know who the owner is, replevin cannot be maintained against the latter without making demand. [§ 70] c. Property Wrongfully Taken by, or in Possession of, Defendant. A previous demand is not necessary in order to maintain replevin where the original taking or possession of defendant is shown to have been wrongful,[46] as where defendant obtained property by fraud.[47] So also no demand is necessary as against a defendant who, although not the original wrongful taker, received the property with knowledge that it was so taken.[48]

[§ 71] d. Property Obtained from Person without Authority To Transfer. It has been held that a demand is necessary where defendant is an innocent purchaser for value and without notice from one who was a wrongful taker or without authority to sell,[49] on the ground that such purchaser cannot be deemed a wrongdoer in merely retaining, in the absence of any demand, what he has in good faith acquired,[50] and should not be subjected to suit without being given an opportunity to surrender the property;[51] and it has been held that this rule applies regardless of the nature of the fraud or wrong by which the property was originally acquired from plaintiff, or in what character or manner it was delivered to defendant, if no fraud or complicity in the transaction can be imputed to him.[52] On the contrary it has been held that a person wrongfully in possession or rightfully in possession but without authority to transfer the property cannot confer upon another a possession which, although innocent, will be rightful as against the true owner,[53] and that therefore no demand by plaintiff is necessary, al-

[a] Illustrations.—(1) A demand before bringing a replevin suit was unnecessary, where defendant landlord's taking was unlawful under excessive claim for rent and amount actually due had been tendered. Arthur v. Calabrese, 8 N. J. Misc. 51, 148 A 569. (2) Where plaintiff's father, made a completed gift of stock to plaintiff, and thereafter the father's administrator obtained possession of the certificates from the corporation to which the stock had been sent for transfer, such possession was wrongful, and no proof of demand was necessary to sustain replevin. Smith v. Meeker, 153 Iowa 655, 133 NW 1058. though defendant is an innocent purchaser for value and without notice.[54] No demand is necessary where defendant knew that the holder of the property had no authority to sell,[55] or trade,[56] or that he had procured the property by fraud,[57] or that it was claimed by other persons.[58] No demand need be made before bringing an action of replevin against the bailee of one who wrongfully obtained possession of plaintiff's property.[59]

[§ 72] e. Property Wrongfully Converted. It is very generally held that where there has been a conversion of the property by defendant or acts amounting to a conversion, no demand by plaintiff is necessary,[60] and this is the case notwithstanding the prior possession of the property was lawfully and rightfully acquired.[61]

[§ 73] f. Property Taken under Process[62]—(1) In General. The owner of property which has been taken under execution or other process against another person may maintain an action of replevin against the officer to recover the same without any previous demand if the taking was wrongful;[63] but if the property was rightfully taken by the officer under valid process and in the discharge of his official duty, if subsequent events entitle the owner to recover it a demand is necessary.[64] So it is held that no demand is necessary to recover property taken by an officer in abuse of his authority,[65] as by taking property under execution which is exempt,[66] or to recover property taken under an attachment founded upon a void affidavit.[67] The general rule is also that no demand is necessary to enable the true owner to recover property which has been seized as the property of another person under process against the latter,[68] particularly where at the time of the seizure the officer was notified as to the ownership of the property.[69] Some of the decisions, however, make a distinction in cases of this character, according to whose possession the property was in at the time of the seizure, it being held that no demand is necessary if the property when seized was not in possession of the person named in the process;[70] but that if the property is found by the officer in the actual custody of the person named in the writ or process, the seizure is not to be deemed wrongful and a demand is necessary,[71] unless the officer at the time of the seizure was notified that the person in possession was not the owner.[72] Elsewhere this distinction has been expressly disapproved,[73] and it is held that the owner of the property may sue without demand, although at the time it was taken it was in possession of the person named in the process.[74] Where an officer has made an effectual levy on property which he leaves in the possession of the owner, he may without demand maintain replevin therefor against another officer who subsequently seizes it under a different process,[75] and the owner of property may without demand sue to recover it from a person who as plaintiff in another action of replevin has recovered it from a third person in whose possession it then was.[76]

[§ 74] (2) Property Sold under Process. Where property has been wrongfully sold under process it has been held that the owner must make a demand therefor before he can maintain an action of replevin against one who has purchased it in good faith at the sale;[77] but in other cases it has been held that no demand is necessary.[78] A purchaser at a sheriff's sale must make a demand for the property bought before he can maintain replevin therefor.[79]

[§ 75] g. Where Demand Would Have Been Unavailing. No demand is necessary where it appears from the facts and circumstances of the case that a demand if made would have been futile and unavailing,[80] and this fact may appear either from the acts or declarations of defendant in regard to the property before the action is instituted,[81] or from the position taken by him upon the trial, as where he does not rely upon the want of a demand as a technical defense but contests the right of plaintiff upon the merits, claiming a superior right or title in himself.[82]

although defendant may honestly believe that his claim is legal and just.[84] So if on the trial defendant contests the case on the merits, basing his defense on title in himself and the right of possession incident thereto,[85] or title in a third person,[86] no demand is necessary; nor in such case can defendant defeat the action on the ground that no demand was in fact made,[87] although the case is one where a demand should have been made,[88] since defendant's position on the trial is inconsistent with any supposition that he would have restored the property if a demand had been made.[89] The rule that a demand is unnecessary where defendant contests the case upon the merits does not, however, apply to cases where a demand is necessary not merely as a basis for asserting the remedy, but to vest in plaintiff a right of possession.[90]

[§ 77] 2. Sufficiency of Demand and Refusal. Where a demand is necessary there must be a distinct demand for possession and a refusal to deliver possession on the making of such demand.[91] Except where the form of demand is prescribed by statute,[92] there need not be a formal demand and refusal in express words,[93] any words will suffice so long as they are understood by both parties to be a demand and refusal.[94] An oral demand has been held to be

Smith v. Hopper, 172 N. C. 630, 90 SE 770.

[b] Demand held insufficient.—Lyle v. Barnes, 30 S. D. 647, 139 NW 338 (demand that cattle be returned to either of two specified places).

[c] A demand of a bill of lading constituting the evidence of title to sufficient.[95] The demand may be sufficient, although it does not specify each article composing the property demanded,[96] particularly where plaintiff attempts to point out the particular articles claimed and defendant refuses to look or consider plaintiff's claims,[97] or peremptorily refuses to surrender any of the property.[98] So also the demand is not necessarily invalidated because it is for more than plaintiff is entitled to,[99] or because plaintiff fails to state the nature of his interest in the property.[1] In some jurisdictions it is held that if defendant contests the action the writ itself is a sufficient demand, and defending the suit a refusal.[2] Where a demand must be made[3] a mere notification that some one wrongfully took the property from plaintiff is not sufficient.[4] A refusal not amounting to a conversion cannot be made the basis of an action of replevin,[5] as, for example, a refusal to deliver to one whose right to possession is doubtful until defendant can ascertain if such person is so entitled, is not such a refusal as will authorize suit until after a reasonable time has elapsed.[6] A demand for payment from a vendee is not a demand for delivery,[7] but an alternative demand of payment or return is sufficient.[8]

[§ 78] 3. By and on Whom Demand May Be Made. The demand need not be made by plaintiff personally, it being sufficient if it is made by a person authorized to act for him;[9] as, for example, one who stands in loco parentis,[10] but it must be made either by plaintiff or by some one authorized to act for him,[11] and a demand made by a person acting in his own right and not as agent of plaintiff cannot avail plaintiff.[12] The authority of an agent to make demand need not be in writing,[13] but defendant is not bound to deliver the property unless there is some evidence of the agent's authority sufficient to justify a reasonably prudent man in doing so.[14] A demand by plaintiff, as an individual, is insufficient to support an action to recover property obtained from plaintiff as a company.[15] The demand must ordinarily be made on defendant himself.[16] In some cases it has been held that where the property is found in the possession of defendant's agent, a demand on the agent is sufficient;[17] but on the contrary it has been held that a demand on an agent having merely the custody of the property and without any general authority to act for defendant or make a delivery thereof is not sufficient,[18] that a demand made on a servant of defendant having the custody of the property is not sufficient[19] unless the servant acted under the direction of the master in refusing to deliver the property,[20] and that a demand made on defendant's wife is not sufficient unless it is shown that defendant had constituted her his agent for the purpose of receiving such demand.[21] In an action against a husband and wife to recover community property a demand on the husband alone is sufficient where by statute he is manager of the community property,[22] and where a husband and wife are jointly in possession of property and the action is brought against the husband alone, a failure to also make demand on the wife will not defeat the action;[23] but where the property is in possession of assignees for the benefit of creditors, and such assignees are not partners, a demand must be made on each in order to maintain a joint action against them.[24]

[§ 79] 4. Time for Making Demand. The demand must be made while defendant is still in possession of the property,[25] and at a time when plaintiff is entitled to its possession;[26] but plaintiff is not obliged to make such demand as soon as he is entitled to do so.[27] As to the stage of the proceedings at which the demand must be made the authorities are conflicting, it being held in some cases that the demand must be made before the writ is issued,[28] and in others that it may be made after the writ is issued if before it is served,[29] particularly if it is made provisionally to be used only in case defendant refuses to give up the property on demand.[30]

[§ 80] 5. Waiver of Demand. In cases where a demand is necessary in replevin it may be waived by defendant,[31] by his conduct or assertions,[32] or by expressly stating that he waives all demand,[33] or he may by contesting the case on the merits and claiming title in himself be precluded from relying on the absence of a demand as a defense to the action;[34] but a refusal to comply with a demand made after the suit is begun and the writ issued will not prevent defendant from relying on the defense that no demand was made before suit,[35] and a mere denial of plaintiff's right to possession is not a plea of property in defendant and does not waive a demand where a demand is necessary to entitle plaintiff to recover.[36] If a demand is technically defective, but defendant absolutely refuses to deliver the goods except on replevin, no further demand is necessary.[37]

VII. DEFENSES[38]

[By Joseph W. Rouse]

[§ 81] A. In General. It is no defense to replevin for a wrongful taking that the owner of the property was indebted to defendant.[39] Any defense which controverts plaintiff's right of possession at the time the suit was brought is allowable,[40] such as invalidity of plaintiff's title,[41] or title or right to possession in defendant[42] or some stranger to the action.[43]

Illegality of transaction. Where parties engage in an unlawful transaction, and in the accomplishment of the illegal purpose one party obtains possession of property claimed by the other, replevin will not lie in behalf of claimant to recover such possession.[44]

Miscellaneous defenses. It is no defense to an action of replevin that defendant purchased the property from one who had tortiously taken it from plaintiff and that plaintiff made no effort to obtain redress from the latter who was financially responsible;[45] that no demand was made for the property prior to suit, unless there was a tender of the property at the trial in accordance with statutory requirements[46] that plaintiff had committed an act which exposed the goods to forfeiture by the federal government, the property belonging to plaintiff until rendition of judgment of forfeiture;[47] that the property was more valuable than at the time of the taking, because of expenditures by defendant;[48] that plaintiff by the use of the property since the commencement of the action has realized more than sufficient to pay the amount of his claim, and has sold the property for a certain sum for which he has not accounted;[49] or that the property replevied (scrip) was of no value in the hands of any one else than plaintiff and that he might have obtained duplicates of it.[50] Where a stranger by means of a redelivery bond secures property seized under a writ against another, on replevin against him it is no defense that he holds under such bond.[51] A breach by plaintiff of a contract to deliver goods is no defense to an action to recover goods delivered.[52] It is no defense that property was taken by defendant as agent of another when he had notice of plaintiff's title.[53] It is no defense that defendant got property through the contributory negligence of plaintiff.[54] An equitable defense of subrogation cannot be set up in replevin.[55] In replevin for money taken, failure of a grand jury to indict defendant for theft, is no defense.[56]

[§ 82] B. Invalidity of Plaintiff's Title. While it has been held that in replevin a denial that the goods are the property of plaintiff is a good defense,[57] it has been held that denial of plaintiff's title alone is not sufficient;[58] and defendant cannot impeach plaintiff's title where in himself he has no title[59] or right to possession.[60] Where each party pleads in general terms that he has title to the property, and denies the title alleged by the other party, defendant may avail himself of the defense that the conveyance under which plaintiff claims title was fraudulent and void as to defendant.[61] Loss of plaintiff's title or ownership before commencement of the action is a good defense.[62]

[55] Luckett v. Brickell, 115 Miss. 457, 76 S 502.

[56] Hecker-Jones-Jewell Milling Co. v. Murray, 178 NYS 335.

Want of title to land is no defense to an action for recovery of crops grown thereon.[63]

[§ 83] C. Property in, or Lien of, Defendant.[64] Property in defendant is a good defense in an action of replevin,[65] and this is ordinarily true whether it be an absolute, or a special or qualified property in the goods which are the subject matter of the litigation.[66] A bona fide purchase from a vendee of plaintiff,[67] or purchase at a sheriff's sale,[68] or purchase of crops from one holding land adversely to plaintiff,[69] is a good defense. But where the property purchased has been stolen, it is no defense that defendant did not know that fact.[70] Where defendant seized goods under a void attachment, and thereafter acquired title to a past due note secured by a mortgage, his right under the mortgage is no defense.[71] Purchase from one who had no title is no defense.[72] Defendant, having no more than an interest in a contract affecting property as distinguished from an interest in the property cannot justify its detention after demand.[73] Title to land under a champertous deed is no defense to replevin of timber cut therefrom.[74]

An equitable lien on the property in controversy may be interposed as a defense,[75] but it is no defense to replevin for an illegal seizure that defendant had an equitable mortgage, where there was nothing due him at the time of the seizure.[76]

[§ 84] D. Property in, or Lien of, Third Person.[77] As plaintiff must be entitled to the immediate possession of the property at the time of the suit,[78] in the absence of statute to the contrary,[79] property and right of possession in a third person is general-

78. See supra § 46.

79. See statutory provisions; and cases infra this note.

[a] In Iowa (1) title in a third person not a party to the action can-

ly a good defense to an action of replevin.[80] It has been held unnecessary for defendant to connect himself with the outstanding title,[81] even when the action is in the cepit,[82] and statutes may provide that title in a third person is a good defense without showing such connection.[83] But as mere possession by plaintiff is sufficient to maintain an action against a trespasser or wrong-doer,[84] it is generally held, in the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, that where the property has been wrongfully taken from plaintiff's possession, defendant cannot set up an outstanding title in a third person, with which he does not connect himself.[85] The lien of a third person upon the property in question is no defense in replevin, as plaintiff takes subject thereto.[86] Where during the pendency of the action, and before trial, defendant has been legally required to deliver the property in dispute to a third person, who is the owner as against both parties to the suit, such delivery may be pleaded, and will constitute a good defense to the replevin suit,[87] but it has been held otherwise when the original taking was wrongful.[88] The property in a third person, sufficient to defeat plaintiff's action, must be such as destroys plaintiff's interest.[89] Title in a third person is no defense when such title is the result of a fraudulent delivery to such person by defendant.[90]

[§ 85] E. In Actions for Property Taken on Legal Process. In replevin against an officer he may justify under a writ not returned at the time the suit was commenced, if the time for making the return had not then expired;[91] and where damages for detention are claimed he may justify by showing the issuance and levy of process by him on the property in suit subsequent to its seizure.[92] Nor is he deprived of the right to defend an action against him for the recovery of the property seized, by the fact that he violated an injunction improvidently granted restraining him from making the seizure.[93] It is not a valid defense, however, to an action against him by one whose property he has seized on execution against another, that he has taken an indemnity bond from plaintiff in execution,[94] but a compliance by plaintiff in execution with a statutory provision requiring execution of an undertaking in favor of claimant, and tender thereof to claimant by the officer, is a valid defense.[95] It is not a defense to an action of replevin for property wrongfully seized on attachment, that defendant subsequently delivered the property to another person on order of the court made in a suit to which plaintiff was not a party;[96] and he cannot justify on the ground that the attachment plaintiff had an independent lien on the property prior to the attachment;[97] nor under a return not made within the

not be shown in defense to a suit in replevin. Under Code § 1999 such third person should be made a party. Reed v. Reed, 13 Iowa 5. (2) Title in a third person is no defense when plaintiff claims merely the right to possession. Corbitt v. Heisey, 15 Iowa 296.

prescribed time,[98] but it has been held a good defense that since the commencement of the action a landlord's lien has been established and the property taken from him.[99] An execution valid on its face but in fact irregular, is a good defense.[1] Where defendant is an officer holding under proper process, he may show that plaintiff acquired the property in fraud of plaintiff in his writ,[2] except where he seizes property owned by some person other than the person named in the process,[3] or where by unlawfully turning over property to plaintiff in the attachment he becomes a trespasser ab initio,[4] and such officer cannot set up in defense that the property was transferred fraudulently as to third persons, if such third persons make no complaint.[5] In an action by a third person for property seized on execution it is no defense that a sheriff's jury found the property in the execution defendant.[6]

[§ 86] F. Set-Off and Counterclaim.[7] Except as the rule may have been altered by statute, a set-off or counterclaim has ordinarily been regarded as not allowable in an action of replevin,[8] except where equitable relief may be demanded under exceptional circumstances.[9] In some jurisdictions the filing of a counterclaim in a replevin suit is expressly prohibited by statute.[10] By an early decision, under the codes counterclaims were held not to be available in any action for a tort, and therefore not in replevin, which sounds in tort.[11] But this rule has been so far modified as to allow the interposition of a counterclaim in the full sense of the code, whether arising on contract or based on a tort, in an action of replevin, whenever such counterclaim is founded on a cause of action arising out of the transaction set forth in the complaint as the foundation of plaintiff's claim, or whenever it is connected with the subject of the action,[12] at least where a money judgment is sought,[13] but otherwise, a counterclaim cannot be allowed.[14] While in some decisions recognizing the right to a counterclaim no affirmative relief was granted,[15] and in others the right was limited to the defeating of plaintiff's demand,[16] in others defendant has been allowed affirmative relief by judgment in his favor for excess of his demand over the amount found to be due to plaintiff.[17] Matter pleaded expressly as a counter-

[a] Reason for rule.—Replevin is in form an action ex delicto, and seeks damages for unlawfully seizing and carrying away personal property. Defendant cannot avail himself of a set-off, because the demand is uncertain in its nature, and it is no justification for a tortious act, that plaintiff is indebted to defendant. Fairman v. Fluck, 5 Watts (Pa.) 516.

[b] Rule applied.—(1) In replevin for goods delivered to defendant under a bailment, and retaken for default of installments of rental, defendant cannot set off an overpayment on another and entirely distinct transaction. Liveright v. Thornton, 56 Pa. Super. 611. (2) In replevin to recover an automobile leased by plaintiff to defendant, proof of conversations in regard to the condition of the machine prior to the execution of the lease are inadmissible, if the purpose of the officer is to lay ground for a set-off. C. H. Hardy Auto Co. v. Posey, 50 Pa. Super. 399.

[c] Avowry for rent.—(1) A set-off cannot be pleaded in bar to an avowry for rent. Roach v. Burgess, 20 F. Cas. No. 11,873, 4 Cranch C. C. 449; Goslin v. Redden, 3 Del. 21; Wolgamot v. Bruner, 4 Harr. & M. (Md.) 89; Fairman v. Fluck, 5 Watts (Pa.) 516; Laycock v. Tufnell, 2 Chit. 531, 18 ECL 772. (2) This rule does not prevent the tenant from availing himself of anything in bar to the avowry for rent in arrear, which goes to show that the rent claimed by the avowant, or any portion of it, is not due; for that is the ground of the distress. Bloodworth v. Stevens, 51 Miss. 475; Fairman v. Fluck, 5 Watts (Pa.) 516. (3) The tenant may deduct from the rent due the damages he may have sustained by the landlord's breach of covenant in the same lease relating to the demised premises and constituting part of the consideration of the rent. Harrison v. Brink, 18 Pa. Dist. 22, 35 Pa. Co. 161.

[d] Where a lessor has covenanted to make certain repairs and improvements in the demised premises, (1) and has failed to perform his covenant, the tenant is entitled in replevin to such defalcation or reduction from the amount of the rent due as is equal to the proportionate part of the damages for the year; but he is not entitled to a deduction of the whole amount of the damage which he has sustained. Bloodworth v. Stevens, 51 Miss. 475; Warner v. Caulk, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 193; Peterson v. Haight, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 150; Fairman v. Fluck, 5 Watts (Pa.) 516; Murray v. Pennington, 3 Gratt. (44 Va.) 87. (2) Therefore, where the goods of the tenant were distrained for the third quarter's rent, it was held that he could not deduct the damages which he had sustained during the quarters preceding. Warner v. Caulk, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 193.

[e] A demand originating in contract cannot be pleaded as a counterclaim in an action for the recovery of a specific chattel. Williams v. Irby, 15 S. C. 458.

[f] Claim against estate.—A statute providing for set-offs or counterclaims in actions by executors and administrators does not give defendant any right to seize decedent's property and, in replevin by an administrator, set off his claim against the estate. Weissman v. Weissman, 156 Wis. 26, 145 NW 230.

Sunset Lumber Co., 57 Or. 309, 111 P 690, 32 LRANS 123, AnnCas1913A 103 (equitable set-off is no defense in an action of replevin, for the distinctions between actions at law and suits in equity have not been abolished).

[a] In Iowa.—(1) Under the express provisions of Code (1897) § 4164, no counterclaim is allowable, since it would allow a creditor to forcibly seize property of his debtor without process and then plead the indebtedness as an offset to an action to recover it back. J. J. Smith claim, although not proper as such, may, if it constitute a defense to a claim in the opposite pleading, be available as a defense.[18]

[a] Claim founded on contract.—(1) Where plaintiff's claim is really founded on contract, as where he seeks, by a writ of replevin, to enforce the provisions of a chattel mortgage, defendant may, notwithstanding the form of the action is replevin, avail himself, by way of set-off, of damages caused by the failure to the other party to the chattel mortgage to comply with his contract. Clement v. Field, 147 U. S. 467, 13 SCt 358, 37 L. ed. 244 [construing a statute of Kansas, and foll Gardner v. Risher, 35 Kan. 93, 10 P 584]. Sunset Lumber Co., 57 Or. 309, 111 P 690, 32 LRANS 123, AnnCas1913A 103 (in replevin for two engines, where defendant set up a contract of purchase and claimed certain amounts as set-off for damages, both by reason of defects in the engines and from damages incurred because of their failure to work, although a set-off could be pleaded, yet, as the amount of the counterclaim did not equal the amount claimed by plaintiff, it would not go to the entire cause of action, so that it could not defeat it).

Recoupment. Although the right to set-off is not recognized in the particular jurisdiction[19] when the goods are the subject of a lien or charge, the charge may be enforced by way of recoupment.[20] However, a claim for unliquidated damages cannot be set up, it has been held, in replevin for property conditionally sold by plaintiff,[21] although it has been held to the contrary that one may reduce claim of plaintiff seeking to replevy goods sold on conditional sale by amount of damage sustained by goods being defective.[22]

[§ 87] G. Waiver of, and Estoppel To Set Up, Defense.[23] The general principles of waiver and estoppel[24] are applicable to the question of waiver of or estoppel to set up defenses in actions of replevin.[25] The filing of a claim of property under a statute providing therefor upon seizure of property by an officer under process does not estop defendant from asserting property in himself in a replevin suit, although he failed to continue his efforts under the claim filed.[26]

[§ 88] A. In General. Although there is authority to the contrary,[28] replevin is ordinarily held to be a local action,[29] although brought for a cause of action for which trespass de bonis asportatis would lie,[30] and where so held should be brought in the county where the cause of action arose,[31] that is,

(2) A defendant in execution is not estopped from setting up the defense, in replevin for the property sold under the execution, that he had no vendible interest therein. Yeldell v. Stemmons, 15 Mo. 443. (3) In replevin for the wrongful detention of property, defendant is estopped, by an assertion of an absolute title to the property, made to plaintiff before suit, to allege at the trial that suit was brought prematurely. Collins v. Bellefonte Cent. R. Co., 171 Pa. 243, 33 A 331. (4) Nondelivery of property to plaintiff. Pomeroy v. Trimper, 8 Allen (Mass.) 398, 85 AmD 714 (holding that a defendant in replevin who has prevented the officer from delivering the replevied property to plaintiff, by attaching it on a writ in his own favor, is estopped to object to the prosecution of the replevin on the ground of such nondelivery). (5) Property in custody of the law. Hasie v. Connor, 53 Kan. 713, 37 P 128; Powell v. Bradlee, 9 Gill & J. (Md.) 220 (if one of plaintiffs in a previous replevin agrees to dispense with the actual delivery of the property taken under it, and to consider it delivered, so that plaintiff in a subsequent replevin may take it as if the delivery under the first writ has been consummated, it is not competent for plaintiffs in such first writ, to object that the property when taken under the second, was in custodia legis, but the objection that the property is in custodia legis may be made, unless there is an agreement, dispensing with the delivery prior to the execution of the second writ, although defendants subsequently to its execution may agree to waive the irregularity, and to ratify and confirm the proceedings of the sheriff). (6) Return of nulla bona will not estop the sheriff from showing, when afterward sued to recover goods which he had seized under execution, that they belonged to the execution debtor and were subject to levy. Burnham v. Brennan, 42 N. Y. Super. 49. (7) In replevin for goods levied on by an officer under execution, the defense of want of notice of the right of ownership by plaintiff should be taken advantage of by demurrer to the complaint or petition, or by an averment in the answer or plea, and where it is not set up until the parties have rested, it will be deemed to have been waived. Warder v. Hoover, 51 Iowa 491, 1 NW 795. (8) When plaintiff and defendant both claim under the same person, plaintiff by purchase and defendant by way of exchange, defendant is not estopped by his relation to the party under whom both claim, to show that the title was not in such party, but in a stranger. McFerrin v. Perry, 1 Sneed (Tenn.) 314. (9) Where the drawer delivers a check to a third person on his promise to deliver it to the person for whom it was intended, such party becomes a bailee for such person; and is estopped to assert a right in himself to the check. Haas v. Altieri, 2 Misc. 252, 21 NYS 950. (10) In an action against a constable to recover property seized on an attachment against a third person, a defense based on contract rights to the property in plaintiff in attachment is properly excluded where no such rights were set up when the demand was made before the replevin suit was brought, and it does not fairly appear that the officer was instructed to hold on the footing of such rights, and where the contract set up gave the right of possession to another. Town v. Tabor, 34 Mich. 262. (11) In Pennsylvania defendant by giving a claim property bond and retaining the property puts it out of his power to set up as a defense distraint for rent in arrear. Baird v. Porter, 67 Pa. 105.

where the property was unlawfully taken or is unlawfully detained,[32] and while it has been held that the action may be brought in either of such counties,[33] it has also been held that, where the gist of the action is the unlawful taking or cepit, it should be brought in the county of the taking;[34] but where it is for a wrongful detention only, necessitating a demand and refusal as a condition precedent to the right of action,[35] the action must be brought at the place where the demand and refusal occurred.[36] The venue of such actions is now ordinarily regulated by the statutes of the various jurisdictions,[37] some of which provide for bringing the action in the county where the property or some part thereof is situated or found,[38] or in the county where defendant or one of defendants resides,[39] or the action may be brought either in the county where the wrongful taking occurred or where plaintiff resides.[40] Where the statute provides that the action may be brought in the county where the property is situated, it may be brought in any such county even though defendant does not reside therein,[41] or, if defendant resides in another county plaintiff may elect to bring the action in that county;[42] but the action must be brought either in the county where the property is situated or where defendant resides.[43]

[§ 89] B. Change of Venue. Under and subject to the rules relative to change of venue in civil actions generally,[44] a change of venue may and should be granted where it appears that the action was not brought in the proper county,[45] or when such change may be necessary for the convenience of witnesses,[46] provided a motion for a change of venue is made[47] and notice thereof given to the adverse party.[48] If, however, the action was properly brought in the county where the property was taken or is situated, defendant is not entitled to a change of venue to the county of his residence because the property was not taken or delivered under the writ,[49] or because plaintiff does not claim an immediate delivery of the property;[50] and where replevin is held to be a local action, the venue will not ordinarily be changed from the county where the cause of action arose.[51]

[a] Local action.—A statute providing that the action shall be brought where the goods are detained makes it a local action. Central Maine Power Co. v. Maine Cent. R. Co., 113 Me. 103, 93 A 41.

[b] Provisions construed.—(1) A statutory provision for trial of action for recovery of personal property in the county where the property is situate applies to the ancillary remedy of claim and delivery. Brown v. Cogdell, 136 N. C. 32, 48 SE 515. (2) In a statute providing for the recovery of property distrained for any cause, distrain means holding for any purpose. Byers v. Ferguson, 41 Or. 77, 65 P 1067, 68 P 5; Wolfe v. Montgomery, 41 S. D. 267, 170 NW 158. (3) The county where the property "is found" related to its location at the time the action is commenced and not to its location when seized under the writ. Craft v. Franks, 34 Iowa 504. (4) The county where the property is situated is not the county where it was taken, but the county where it is unlawfully held at the time the action is instituted. Byers v. Ferguson, supra.

39. See statutory provisions; and cases infra this note.

[a] Particular provision applicable to replevin.—Where a sale provides for bringing of certain actions in certain places and further provides that in all other cases the action shall be brought where defendants or one of them resides, such provision applies to replevin, where replevin is not included in the sections dealing with specified actions. Fry v. Shafor, 164 Ind. 699, 74 NE 503; Hodson v. Warner, 60 Ind. 214; Shryer v. Miner, 20 Ind. 175; Boswell v. Laramie First Nat. Bank, 16 Wyo. 161, 92 P 624, 93 P 661 (holding that, under such a statute of Wyoming, replevin is not a local action and need not be brought where the goods are detained).

[b] Where there are several defendants residing in different counties, the action may be brought in any county in which any defendant resides, if such defendant was made a party in good faith, but if such defendant is not a necessary party and was made such merely to give the court of the county of his residence jurisdiction of the action, and the action is dismissed as to him, the case stands as if it had been originally instituted in a county where no defendant resided, and such fact may be pleaded by plaintiff to defeat the jurisdiction of the court. Shryer v. Miner, 20 Ind. 175.

40. See statutory provisions; and cases infra this note.

[a] Repeal of previous enactments.—A statute providing that the action may be brought "in the county where the wrongful taking occurred, or where the plaintiff resides," authorizes an action to be brought in the county where plaintiff resides, although the taking was by a sheriff, and the prior statutes in regard to actions against public officers provided that such actions should be tried in the county where the cause of action arose. Hinds v. Backus, 45 Minn. 170, 47 NW 655; Leonard v. Maginnis, 34 Minn. 506, 26 NW 733.

[a] Under statutory provisions requiring the action to be brought in the county in which the property, or some part thereof, is found, it is error to refuse change of venue to such county where defendant, having possession, resided. Williams v. Rollins, 107 S. C. 440, 93 SE 1.

[b] It is reversible error to exclude evidence offered in support of a motion for a change of venue in an action of replevin, where such evidence tends to show that the action was not brought in the proper county. Parker v. Norris, 56 Iowa 295, 9 NW 225.

St. [1878] c 66 § 132, it is optional with plaintiff to claim an immediate delivery of the property or to let the action proceed and obtain possession upon execution after judgment, and that a failure to claim immediate delivery does not change the action to one for conversion, and does not necessitate a change of venue from the county where the property was taken to the county of defendant's residence).

IX. TIME TO SUE AND LIMITATIONS

[By Joseph W. Rouse]

[§ 90] The action depending on the right to possession,[52] it is premature if brought before plaintiff acquires the right to possession.[53] Replevin will not lie for property held in connection with a tenancy on shares running from year to year and terminable only on notice until the year has expired and notice has been given,[54] and a landlord cannot replevy his share of a crop until sufficient time has elapsed to allow the tenant to deliver it,[55] but replevin will lie for animals impounded either before or after they are advertised.[56] Where a demand is necessary before bringing suit,[57] the action is not prematurely brought when brought before demand if the writ is made provisionally for use only in case of refusal to deliver the property on demand.[58]

The statutes of limitations applicable to actions for the recovery of personal property have been held to apply to actions of replevin,[59] and begin to run from the time of the wrongful taking and not from the time when plaintiff first had knowledge thereof if there was no fraud or attempt at concealment,[60] and if such fraud or concealment exists it must, in order to avail plaintiff, be the act of defendant himself;[61] but where a demand is a prerequisite to the bringing of the action,[62] the limitation runs from the time of such demand.[63] A statute requiring the filing of an affidavit stating that the cause of action arose within two years has been held not a statute of limitations,[64] the affidavit being merely a prerequisite to the issuance of the writ.[65]

Laches. A delay of thirty-three days after demand before bringing suit is not laches.[66]

X. PARTIES[67]

[By Joseph W. Rouse]

[§ 91] A. Plaintiffs. Since in replevin the right to possession is essentially involved,[68] the party entitled thereto must be the real plaintiff in the suit,[69] and a party not holding the legal title, nor entitled to possession, cannot maintain replevin for the use of another;[70] but if a party who sues for the use of another is entitled to recover in his own name, the fact that the usee's name is inserted in the pleading should not alone defeat a recovery.[71] In such case the usee's name may be treated as surplusage,[72] but recovery can be had only when the nominal plaintiff is entitled to recover.[73] While it has been held that a joint owner or tenant in common of property may sue alone to recover it from a trespasser,[74] or where he has the consent of the cotenants,[75] or where his prior possession was with the consent of his coowner,[76] the general rule is that an action of replevin cannot be maintained by one of several joint owners or tenants in common without joining the others as parties,[77] but while joint tenants or tenants in common may and should be joined,[78] several persons having separate and distinct interests in a chattel cannot join in such action,[79] nor can a person having neither title nor right of possession to the property in question join in an action for its recovery,[80] although the joinder of other parties by a plaintiff having the whole possessory right has been held immaterial to defendant.[81] A person in the lawful possession of property for another may bring the action of replevin in his own name for the recovery thereof,[82] and an administrator or executor may bring an action of replevin for property of his intestate in his own name; he need not sue in his representative capacity.[83]

[§ 92] B. Defendants. It is essential that defendant have actual or constructive possession of the property,[84] and the person in possession of the property is ordinarily the proper and only necessary party defendant,[85] and persons who were never in actual or constructive possession are improperly joined as defendants,[86] but the joinder as defendant of a person not in possession of the property is not necessarily fatal to the action.[87] Plaintiff is not required to join as defendants persons claiming an interest in the property but not in possession thereof,[88] although he may do so;[89] or a stranger in whom property is pleaded or shown,[90] or one claiming no interest in the property nor any right to possession;[91] nor is he entitled to an order making persons so interested but whose presence is not necessary to the determination of the controversy between him and defendant in possession parties against their will,[92] although they may properly be admitted as defendants upon their own application.[93] It has been held, however, that a servant who in the course of his employment wrongfully takes the property of another may be joined with the master in an action of replevin.[94] One who participated in a wrongful taking, although not in possession of, and making no claim to, any of the property, is a proper party defendant,[95] and it has also been held that, where one person wrongfully takes property and turns it over to another who wrongfully retains it, they may be sued jointly,[96] and where the physical possession is in one who is directed by another to refuse to give it up, the action may be brought against both.[97]

One having constructive possession by his agent is a proper party defendant.[98]

Where several persons are in possession of the property, they are all properly made defendants.[99]

Separate possession. A single action of replevin against two defendants, each of whom was in the separate possession of some of the goods, is a misjoinder of parties.[1]

Where the action is against an officer to recover property wrongfully taken by him under process, he may be sued either as an officer or as an individual,[2] and in such action the officer is the only necessary party defendant,[3] the joinder of the judgment creditor or plaintiff in attachment being neither necessary nor proper,[4] and it is improper to join the sureties on the officer's bond,[5] although it is proper to join the execution plaintiff when he assumed control of the writ and directed the levy.[6] A sheriff and his purchaser under an execution sale may be joined in a replevin action by a third person who served notice of ownership on the sheriff prior to the sale.[7]

C. 534 (where it was held that an application to intervene made by a person claiming to be the owner of a part of the property is properly denied on the ground of laches, where he has waited for more than three years after the seizure and shows no excuse for the delay).

vene after a default has been entered against defendant.[18] The only question an intervenor can raise is his title or claim to the property,[19] and one who seeks to intervene must claim ownership of the goods.[20] It has been held not erroneous to refuse to permit a third person to intervene when defendant holds the property for such person and can interpose all defenses available to the third person,[21] or to refuse to grant the application if it would delay the disposition of the case between the original parties,[22] or where the only right which applicant shows to the property rests upon his own fraud;[23] and where a person with the consent of the parties consents to be a defendant after the action has been pending for several months, and no action is then taken by the court, it is not error for the trial court on rendering judgment to order that he be dropped from the action.[24] In replevin to recover goods seized by a landlord from his tenant, if plaintiff fails to join the bailiff who distrained for the landlord, the bailiff may intervene.[25] Where defendant appears and answers as the defendant sued under a fictitious name, he need not obtain leave to intervene.[26]

[§ 94] D. Substitution of Parties. In some jurisdictions the statutes provide that, in actions against an officer for the recovery of property seized under process, the court may upon application substitute plaintiff in such process as defendant,[27] but it is within the discretion of the court to grant or refuse such application,[28] although it is said that it should be permitted when the rights of plaintiff will not be injured.[29] Provision is also made by statute in some jurisdictions for the substitution of an assignee of the cause of action after suit brought as plaintiff,[30] and for the substitution as defendant of a person claiming the property in question, upon application of the original defendant who is in possession of the property but has no claim thereto.[31] It has been held, in the absence of express statutory provision, that, where the property has been distrained for rent by an agent of a landlord, the landlord may come in and be substituted for the agent and avow for rent in arrear,[32] and that the coheirs or joint tenants of a defendant in replevin may upon his death come in and defend the action;[33] but where plaintiff has taken the property, it is error to permit a stranger to be substituted for the original plaintiff, over defendant's objection,[34] or at least it is not error to refuse to do so where the person sought to be substituted as plaintiff has not given any bond,[35] and in any case, where a substitution of parties is not a matter of right, it should not be permitted where it would operate to the prejudice of the adverse party.[36] So it has been held that a substitution introducing entire new parties is properly refused.[37] Where there is a substitution of parties plaintiff, a stipulation entered into by the original plaintiff will bind the substituted plaintiff.[38]

[§ 95] E. Defects and Objections.[39] Under the rule that in actions ex delicto the nonjoinder of all proper parties plaintiff must be objected to by plea in abatement,[40] the nonjoinder of a joint owner as a party plaintiff must be objected to by plea in abatement,[41] and such objection is waived by pleading to the merits.[42] But where this rule is not in force, it is not necessary to object by plea in abatement,[43] but the non-joinder may be pleaded either in bar or abatement,[44] or be taken advantage of by demurrer,[45] or by motion in arrest of judgment,[46] or upon the trial under the general issue.[47]

XI. PRELIMINARY TAKING, REDELIVERY, AND IMPOUNDING OF PROPERTY

[By FELIX C. GRABER]

[§ 97] A. Taking Property—1. Necessity. Under various statutory provisions the action of replevin may be brought and the rights of the parties tried without a preliminary seizure of the property,[51] such proceeding being a mere ancillary or provisional remedy which plaintiff may or may not pursue at his option.[52]

[§ 98] 2. Procedure[53]—a. Affidavit—(1) Nature and Purpose. The affidavit required in an action of replevin as a condition precedent to obtaining a writ or order of delivery[54] corresponds to the "proceeding by plaint"[55] under the statute of Marlbridge.[56] For some purposes it is considered as being in the nature of process,[57] and its filing has been said to commence the suit in replevin.[58] Although under various statutory provisions its use as a pleading is permitted,[59] filing the affidavit is a proceeding,[60] as distinguished from a pleading.[61] The office of the affidavit is to anticipate the delivery of the property to plaintiff without waiting for the determination of his rights by judgment,[62] and to prevent defendant's retention thereof;[63] and its office ceases upon delivery of the property.[64]

[§ 99] (2) Necessity—(a) In General. Upon suing out a writ of replevin, or instituting a claim and delivery proceeding, plaintiff is required under variout statutes to furnish an affidavit.[65] Where immediate possession of the property is demanded, the affidavit required by statute is an essential prerequisite to the order for delivery or the issue or execution of the writ as the statute may provide,[66] and, although failure to comply with the requirement has been held to be merely an irregularity in procuring and issuing the replevin process,[67] under some statutes conferring jurisdiction of such possessory actions upon inferior courts, the affidavit is held to be the basis of the suit without which there is no jurisdiction;[68] and in such case an oath before the magistrate will not suffice to take the place of the prescribed affidavit or oath or affirmation reduced to writing.[69] Where an affidavit before execution, but not before issue of the writ, is contemplated by the statute, jurisdiction to issue the writ does not depend upon the affidavit[70] but it must be made and annexed to the writ before it is executed.[71]

As to new party brought in by amendment after obtaining an order of delivery, the proceeding is held to be void without any additional affidavit.[72]

Affidavit of value.[73] In order to determine the amount of bail, statutes in some jurisdictions require plaintiff to file an affidavit of value.[74] Such statutes are directory,[75] and the making of the affidavit is not a prerequisite to the power of the officer to issue the writ.[76]

[§ 100] (b) In Actions Not Involving Preliminary Seizure. Where the action of replevin may be brought and the rights of the parties tried without a preliminary seizure of the property,[77] the affidavit is not essential if plaintiff elects to proceed without disturbing defendant's possession.[78] In such cases the affidavit is not jurisdictional.[79] If there is no pleading there is no case in court to be tried, even though the affidavit is filed,[80] while, on the other hand, if there is a good pleading there is a cause in court without the affidavit;[81] and in the absence of the affidavit the action may proceed to judgment determining the rights of the parties.[82] If the writ or order has issued improperly without such affidavit it may be quashed or set aside,[83] and the goods taken thereunder must be returned;[84] but even if the writ has issued, the want of proper affidavit is not material after judgment, where the possession was not taken under the writ[85] or the property was not found.[86]

But the act of 1842, instead of requiring the bond to be executed in the clerk's office, directed that it should be taken by the sheriff in the same penalty, and that the value of the property should be ascertained by two or more disinterested persons, under an oath administered by the officer, and this act was held to repeal all others coming within its purview, and substantially so much of the earlier act as required an affidavit of value to be filed in the clerk's office. And see cases supra § 99 text and note 68). (3) This distinction was not observed in some early cases which held that an affidavit was not necessary in an action before a justice of the peace (Zimmerman v. Downey, 66 Mo. A. 106; Bingham v. Morrow, 29 Mo. A. 448); (4) but later the distinction and the error of those cases was recognized (White v. Grace, supra).

[§ 101] (3) Requisites, Sufficiency, and Validity[87]—(a) In General. An affidavit made to obtain an order for delivery of the property or to authorize the issue of a writ of replevin should be in the form prescribed[88] and must contain all the material averments which by the statute are essential to entitle the party to anticipate delivery of the property;[89] but it need not contain any other averments,[90] and if it is in the language of the statute it will be sufficient.[91] While there is authority to the effect that the statutory requisites of an affidavit for such purpose must be strictly complied with,[92] it has been held that a substantial compliance therewith is sufficient[93] and that mere formal or clerical defects are not fatal to the exercise of jurisdiction of the cause.[94] Thus defects in designating the name of plaintiff will not render the affidavit insufficient where the officer who issues the writ thereon certifies that the affidavit was subscribed and sworn to,[95] or where the affidavit by reference to another instrument sufficiently identifies plaintiff;[96] and a clerical mistake in the spelling of defendant's name is immaterial where the identity of the party otherwise appears.[97] It is not a good rule to permit affidavits to be untruly made under the expectation that something will be done to make them true,[98] and where a demand is necessary to support the writ,[99] an affidavit which is sworn to before the demand is made is not sufficient.[1] The affidavit of ownership of property annexed to a writ of replevin should not be entitled.[2] It is not fatal to a recovery that, inadvertently, the affidavit made at the time it was filed did not have the jurat of the officer attached until after such filing.[3]

Officer administering oath. The affidavit must be made before an officer who is authorized to administer oaths.[4] An affidavit made before a notary who is plaintiff's attorney, however, is void.[5]

Subscription by affiant. Pursuant to the general rule announced in many jurisdictions,[6] an affidavit in replevin is sufficient, although it is not subscribed by affiant, where his name appears as affiant in the body of the instrument and the officer attaches his jurat and certifies that the affidavit was subscribed and sworn to before him.[7]

In determining sufficiency of an affidavit its allegations must be regarded as true.[8]

Affidavit of value.[9] Defects or irregularities in an affidavit of value are not fatal to the action of replevin.[10] The writ will not be quashed for failure of an affidavit of value to aver the authority of the person making it for a corporation.[11] The affidavit need not be in the language of the statute if it contains everything required thereby.[12]

[§ 102] (b) Incorporating in, or Annexing Affidavit to, Pleading. Although the better practice is to keep the affidavit and pleading separate,[13] if plaintiff's pleading contains a statement of every fact which the statute requires to be shown in the affidavit, and the pleading is verified by affidavit covering every statement therein, this will be sufficient without a separate affidavit;[14] but in no event can the pleading supply the absence of the affidavit unless all that the affidavit is required to contain is embodied in the pleading,[15] and the pleading is verified in the form as required in the case of a separate affidavit.[16] On the other hand, the affidavit need not be annexed to the pleading or filed contemporaneously with it, but may be an independent instrument.[17]

[§ 103] (c) Affidavit by Agent or Attorney.[18] Generally, under the various statutory provisions, an affidavit in replevin which is verified by plaintiff's duly authorized agent or attorney,[19] or by plaintiff or someone who acts in his behalf,[20] is sufficient, as where the facts are within his personal knowledge or plaintiff is not within the county, or the like;[21] but it should appear that the person so making the affidavit is acting for the principal in the capacity as contemplated by the statute.[22] An affidavit signed by a representative of a plaintiff corporation without stating why an officer did not sign is sufficient to sustain the issuing of a writ.[23] The agent must be enabled to speak from facts independent of the mere information of the party;[24] but it has been said that the court will assume personal knowledge without an express allegation thereof in the case of allegations made by one who appears to have been in a position to have had such knowledge of the particular matters.[25] The same positiveness is required in an affidavit made by his agent as would be required in an affidavit made by plaintiff himself;[26] hence the facts which the statute requires to be alleged positively cannot be alleged in the form that affiant believes them;[27] but where the principal might have alleged particular matters according to his best knowledge, the agent may make the affidavit in the same manner.[28] In the absence of statutory provision therefor, the required facts need not be made to appear "to the satisfaction" of the court.[29] The affidavit must refer to the rights and claims of the principal and not those of the affiant,[30] and if in each necessary allegation it refers to the claims of the affiant, it will be treated as in his favor individually, and insufficient to authorize the issue of an order of delivery in favor of the principal.[31] Where plaintiff is a corporation, and therefore cannot make an affidavit, any official engaged in its management and familiar with the facts may properly do so,[32] but an affidavit made under such circumstances on information and belief must allege the sources of the information, or the agent's knowledge, or the grounds of his belief.[33]

See Crawshaw v. Wright, 5 Mo. A. 577.

[a] Agent in particular business.—(1) A statute enacting that before a writ of replevin shall issue, the person claiming the property, "his servant or agent" shall make a prescribed affidavit, requires that the agent or servant shall sustain that relation in the particular business of the principal in which the cause of action arose and not one who is merely deputed to make the affidavit. Arnold v. Hamilton, 1 Ont. Pr. 263. (2) Under such a statute the affidavit must show the agency contemplated (Arnold v. Hamilton, supra), (3) but an affidavit showing that affiant is "now acting" for the principal will be sufficient if it can be gathered from other parts of the affidavit that such acting is as agent within the meaning of the statute (Arnold v. Hamilton, supra).

[b] Signing name of principal.—The affidavit should regularly be signed in the name of the agent, but signing in the name of the principal by the agent, naming him as such, is sufficient where it is shown in the body of the instrument that it is made by affiant as agent. [25] Sloan v. Implement Dealers' Mfg. Co., 25 Misc. 451, 55 NYS 558 (where, however, there was an express allegation of personal knowledge).

Description as agent or allegation of relation. Although it is more regular that the fact of the agency should be stated and sworn to instead of being added to the name of the affiant by way of description,[34] an affidavit in the latter form is not fatally defective,[35] and the objection is not jurisdictional.[36]

Affidavit of value need not aver the authority of the person who makes the affidavit for a corporation.[37]

[§ 104] (d) Particular Averments—aa. Title and Right to Possession.[38] The affidavit in replevin should contain such an allegation as to ownership, general or special, in plaintiff, and his right to the immediate possession of the property, as the statute prescribes,[39] and an omission of such allegation will render the affidavit defective, upon proper objection thereto.[40] A general allegation of ownership is sufficient when the plaintiff does not claim a special property,[41] and an affidavit of general ownership is sufficient where as a matter of fact the interest in the subject matter is special.[42] Where the plaintiff claims a special property, however, the facts with respect to such special property are under some statutes required to be alleged.[43] Where the statute merely requires an allegation that plaintiff is the owner or entitled to immediate possession, an affidavit which shows that it was manifestly the intention to allege that plaintiff was in possession when defendant seized the property is sufficient;[44] plaintiff is not under such statute bound to set out evidence of his title,[45] and when he does so, such averments are surplusage.[46] Under a statute which confers jurisdiction upon justices of the peace upon the filing of the prescribed affidavit,[47] the omission of an averment of title or right to possession is fatal to the jurisdiction at any stage of the cause.[48] It is not sufficient to aver the right, in the alternative, to be in one of two persons.[49]

Mere clerical error manifest upon the face of the affidavit will not vitiate it.[50]

[a] Erroneous substitution in one place of the names of defendants for plaintiffs does not vitiate the affidavit. Churchill v. Rea, 126 Mich. 175, 85 NW 465.

[§ 105] bb. Taking or Detention[51]—(aa) In General. An allegation that the property was unlawfully taken or unlawfully detained is not necessary where the statute requires no such allegation,[52] but the requirement being only that the allegation in this respect shall be that plaintiff is the owner and lawfully entitled to the possession of the property, such allegation is all that is necessary.[53] An allegation of unlawful taking or detention,[54] or that plaintiff was lawfully in possession of the property and that it was unlawfully taken from his possession,[55] is necessary, however, under statutes requiring it. Allegations in the language of the statute[56] or its equivalent[57] are sufficient; but the entire absence of any statement of a wrongful or other detention of the property is fatal when such statement is required.[58] It has been held, however, that in a court of record where the petition on file contains the allegation, this is sufficient to confer jurisdiction to issue the writ and it will be voidable merely.[59] An allegation that defendant wrongfully detains possession from plaintiff is insufficient to show such possession in defendant as will unite with his right to a lien.[60]

Place of taking. At common law, replevin is a local action and the place, vill, or parish must be averred;[61] but under statutory provisions enlarging the remedy and making it transitory in its nature, it is not necessary to allege the particular place where the property was taken.[62]

[§ 106] (bb) Cause of Taking, or Detention. The statutes often require that the affidavit in replevin shall allege the cause of detention according to the best knowledge, information, and belief of the person making the affidavit,[63] that the property was not taken for any tax, fine, or assessment,[64] and that it was not seized under any execution, attachment, or other legal process against the property of the plaintiff in replevin,[65] or that if so seized, the property is exempt from such seizure.[66] Such provisions, being general and without exceptions as to any action, apply indiscriminately to all actions of replevin,[67] notwithstanding the property is of such a character that the statement in its nature is inappropriate thereto;[68] and all the required facts must be sworn to exist, an omission of any of them being fatal to the writ or order of delivery.[69] A substantial compliance with the statute is sufficient with respect to the form of the allegation.[70]

[a] Thus, (1) although the word "detained" is omitted, to say that a man has property in his possession unlawfully, to which another is entitled, means about the same thing as to say it is detained, and the affidavit is not fatally defective. Smith v. Dodge, 37 Mich. 354. (2) So an affidavit stating that plaintiff was entitled to possession of the property, which was then in the possession of defendant, and that it was not subject to seizure, was a substantial compliance with the statute, and defendant's motion to quash the writ was properly overruled. Cartwright v. Smith, 104 Tenn. 689, 58 SW 331.

[58] McArthur v. Hogan, 15 F. Cas. No. 8,659a, Hempst. 286; Hudelson v. Tobias First Nat. Bank, 51 Nebr. 557, 71 NW 304.

[59] Hudelson v. Tobias First Nat. Bank, supra.

[60] Brownell v. Twyman, 68 Ill. A. 67.

[a] Thus the mere fact that plaintiff in his affidavit alleges that defendant wrongfully detains possession from him will not by itself show possession in defendant so as to unite such possession to her right to a landlord's lien, and to enable her to retain such possession as against plaintiff an innocent purchaser from the tenant apparently in possession, where the purchaser was actually in possession for the purpose of removing the property when defendant interfered with such removal. Brownell v. Twyman, 68 Ill. A. 67.

[61] Whisler v. Roberts, 19 Ill. 274.

[62] Whisler v. Roberts, supra.

[63] See statutory provisions.

[64] See statutory provisions.

[a] Validity of tax.—(1) The taking for a tax cannot be negatived in a form merely to raise the question of the validity of the tax, leaving the implication that the property had been taken in fact for a tax of some description, since the policy of the state forbids the stay of the execution of its revenue laws by such means. McClaughry v. Cratzenberg, 39 Ill. 117. (2) But an exception in this respect is sometimes made by the statute, and the form of affidavit in that kind of a case is prescribed. See statutory provisions. (3) Thus, under a statute in effect permitting replevin of property taken under color of a warrant against plaintiff for the collection of a tax assessment or fine issued in pursuance of a statute of the state or of the United States, providing that the affidavit delivered to the sheriff states either that the taking was unlawful by reason of defects in the process or other cause specified, or that the detention is unlawful by reason of facts specified, which have subsequently occurred, an affidavit is insufficient, as stating a mere conclusion, where it alleges that the process was defective, in that the tax contained moneys which were not legally chargeable, but does not state what moneys were improperly included. Norris v. Jones, 7 Misc. 198, 27 NYS 209 [aff 81 Hun 304, 27 NYS 209, 30 NYS 1134]. (4) The regularity of such an affidavit will not, however, be considered when questioned by a motion not sufficiently specifying the irregularities. Paddock v. Guyder, 8 NYS 905.

[a] Control of particular statute omitting requirement.—Although the statute requires the affidavit for a writ of replevin in circuit court to aver that the property sought to be replevied had not been taken from plaintiff for any tax or assessment, nor seized under any execution or attachment against his goods, where such provision is omitted from the statute relating exclusively to proceedings in replevin before justices of the peace, in such actions the affidavit is not required. Bringhurst v. Pollard, 6 Ind. 452.

[b] Validity of judgment, process, or execution.—(1) A valid judgment cannot be successfully contested in any way except by proceedings to set it aside. So the object of such statute is not solely to protect the process of the court when issued on a valid judgment. The object of the clause, as drawn from its language, and from other parts of the section, as well as from the history of the action known as replevin, is to compel a party who desires to contest the validity of any judgment or order of a court, or any tax, fine, or amercement, or any other mesne or final process, so to do in some other way than by seizing property already in the custody of the law. An order of attachment is most frequently issued by the clerk under the law. If improvidently issued, and property is seized, the remedy of taking it out of the possession of the law, and by such a proceeding trying the validity of the order or writ is not tolerated. A safer and more reasonable remedy exists. Much less ought the validity of a judgment to be contested in such a proceeding. Westenberger v. Wheaton, 8 Kan. 169. (2) Accordingly plaintiff, seeking to recover property levied on under execution in a suit by infants, can not evade such provision by alleging that the property was not seized under any "valid process or execution." Stephens v. Curtner, 205 Mo. A. 255, 222 SW 497. (3) On the other hand it has been held that the purpose of the statute in requiring an averment that the property was not taken in execution, etc., was to prevent one from replevying property which has been seized on execution issued upon a valid judgment against him, and should not be construed as prohibiting in all cases the replevin of property which has been levied upon by an officer under an execution, where the judgment is void or has been paid. Muller v. Plue, 45 Nebr. 701, 64 NW 232 [overr Wilson v. Macklin, 7 Nebr. 50 (which held that an affidavit stating that the goods were not taken in execution on any order or judgment against plaintiff, but were taken by execution issued against plaintiff on a void judgment, was defective and that plaintiff could not assail the validity of the judgment upon which the execution issued)].

Collateral attack on judgment by subsequent action of replevin see Judgments § 830.

[66] See statutory provisions.

[§ 107] cc. Demand. In an action founded upon wrongful detention only, and not upon a wrongful taking of a chattel, a demand for the return of the property must be alleged in the affidavit.[71] The failure of the affidavit to meet this requirement goes to the validity of the writ itself and makes it void.[72]

[§ 108] dd. Description and Value of Property—(aa) Description. It is essential to a proper affidavit in replevin that it describe the property sued for in such manner as to afford the means of identifying it,[73] and the affidavit is sufficient as to description if it does this.[74] In the subjoined notes may be found illustrations of descriptions which have been held sufficient[75] or have been held insuf-

[a] Averment substantially in statutory language (1) is sufficient. Carlson v. Small, 32 Minn. 492, 21 NW 737. And see cases infra note 70. (2) Thus, although the correct practice is to state the case accurately either negativing the taking of the property under lawful process, or stating that process has been levied thereon, and that it is exempt, an affidavit stating that the property "was not taken from him [plaintiff] by any process legally and properly issued against him, or, if so taken, it was exempt" is not void. [a] Thus (1) an affidavit alleging that the property in question "was not taken in execution on or under a judgment against the plaintiff," nor "by virtue of any other mesne or final process" issued against plaintiff, was not insufficient because the allegation was not in the language of the statute that the property "was not taken in execution on any order or judgment against the plaintiff," and was sufficient to confer jurisdiction although it might have been defective in form. Williams v. Gardner, 22 Kan. 122. (2) Where the affidavit did not expressly state in specific terms and in the very language of the statute that "the property had not been seized by virtue of an order of delivery issued under this article," but it did state, in addition to the other statutory averments required in the affidavit of replevin, that "the property was not taken on execution by any order of the court," it was held that since "an order of delivery issued under this article" is "an order of the court," the omitted clause is adequately covered by the language used. Scott v. Jones, 7 Okl. 42, 54 P 308. (3) An affidavit of replevin given to secure an order of delivery of two bales of cotton, which alleges that the cotton was not taken as a tax or fine against plaintiff, but merely stored for safe-keeping, inferentially shows that the property was not taken under a judgment or execution as required by the statute. 75. See cases infra this note.

[a] Itemized schedule.—In a replevin for articles used in a hotel, where a schedule of two or three hundred articles was itemized and the aggregate value given, and by leave of court the affidavit was amended to show plaintiff entitled to all the goods and chattels on the premises the value of which did not exceed the sum first named, the affidavit and amendment, together with the list, was a sufficient description of the property. Upton v. Pendry, 109 Kan. 744, 202 P 73, 76 [reh den 110 Kan. 191, 203 P 300, and cit Cyc].

[b] Place where property found.—An affidavit describing the property as "one lot of wood" and giving the place where it would be found is sufficient. Peterson v. Fowler, 76 Mich. 258, 43 NW 10.

[c] Dry goods.—An affidavit describing the property as "all the dry goods, notions, carpets, wall paper, crockery, boots and shoes, groceries, fixtures, safe, and the personal effects of Parsons & Beach, in the Birdsall Block, in the said village of Whitney's Point," although in general terms, is sufficient. McCarthy v. Ockerman, 154 N. Y. 565, 49 NE 153.

[d] Lumber.—An affidavit describing the lumber as North Carolina pine, and giving an itemized and detailed statement of the various sizes, and in many instances of the particular grade, and of the use for which designed, with the respective quantity in feet of each kind is sufficient. Sloan v. Implement Dealers' Mfg. Co., 25 Misc. 451, 55 NYS 558.

[e] Mare described in an affidavit as a blazed-faced, cream-colored mare, eight or nine years old, described in a certain mortgage of record as being a cream-colored mare seven years old, is sufficiently described in such affidavit. King v. Connevy, 52 Ark. 115, 12 SW 203.

[f] "One sewing machine and one pool-table" is a sufficient description. Proper v. Conkling, 67 Mich. 244, 34 NW 560.

[g] Ore.—The description in a replevin affidavit which described the property as two thousand five hundred pounds of zinc and lead ore, the same being a quantity of such ore delivery, to defendants on the ——— ficient,[76] or which have been questioned.[77]

[§ 109] (bb) Value.[78] Although statutes requiring such averment must be complied with,[79] when the statute does not, in terms, require the affidavit to state the value of the property, and the jurisdiction of the court does not depend upon value, it need not be stated.[80] It is otherwise, however, as to inferior courts whose jurisdiction is limited by the amount or value of property in controversy, as in the case of justices of the peace,[81] or when such a showing is required by the statute as a condition to the exercise of jurisdiction,[82] notwithstanding such averment has been omitted from a form prescribed by the same statute.[83] Even where the statute does not specifically require such fact to be shown by affidavit, the jurisdiction of the justice which is made to depend upon the value of the property should be shown by the affidavit;[84] but the value need not be averred where the statute contemplates that the writ may issue from a justice of the peace for property of greater value than the amount limiting his jurisdiction.[85] A statute requiring the affidavit to state the value of the property is not satisfied by a statement of the value of a portion thereof.[86]

Purpose of statement of value required in the affidavit under some statutes has been held to be to fix the amount of the replevin and redelivery bonds,[87] to aid in identifying the property,[88] and to determine the jurisdiction of the court where jurisdiction is limited by the amount involved.[89]

Statement of aggregate value satisfies the general terms of a statement of the real value of the property,[90] and under a statute requiring the value of each of several articles claimed to be stated as near-

day of July, 1907, to be milled, of the value of fifty dollars, and alleged that it had been damaged by being mixed with inferior ore is sufficient. Blurton v. Hansen, 135 Mo. A. 548, 116 SW 474.

[h] "Quantity of wheat, rye, and oats, being one-half of the grain grown on the Simmons farm in the year 1892," is a sufficient description. Simmons v. Robinson, 101 Mich. 240, 59 NW 623.

[i] Wool pelts.—An affidavit describing the property as "10,090 wool pelts, the wool taken therefrom, and the skins thereof (otherwise known as slats) in pickle or lime" is sufficient. Marshall v. Friend, 33 Misc. 443, 68 NYS 502.

[76] See cases infra this note.

[a] Description intelligible only to an expert is not a sufficient compliance with the statute. Van Dyke v. New York State Banking Co., 18 Misc. 661, 43 NYS 735.

[b] Specification of property.—(1) An affidavit describing the property sought to be replevied as "ten thousand, two hundred dollars, in money, currency of the United States," is insufficient for failure to indicate what specific money was to be taken by the sheriff. Spear v. Arkansas Nat. Bank, 111 Ark. 29, 163 SW 508, AnnCas1916A 735. (2) A description of property as "182 bushels of corn," without attempting to identify it, is insufficient. Sullivan v. Hansen, 95 Nebr. 779, 146 NW 983. (3) A description of property as ninety-eight trees which affiant has been informed and believes were cut upon a specified lot, is insufficient. Jones v. Cook, 2 Ont. Pr. 396.

[c] Unexplained abbreviations, figures, and letters.—An Affidavit describing some of the articles by abbreviations and by figures and letters, the meaning of which is not shown by anything contained in the schedule or in the affidavit is insufficient. National Enameling, etc., Co. v. Kaplan, 53 App. Div. 96, 65 NYS 732.

[d] Unintelligible descriptions are insufficient, as: (1) Where the affidavit simply referred to some pieces and numbers of yards and other unintelligible numbers (Schweitering v. Rothschild, 26 App. Div. 614, 50 NYS 206); (2) where the chattels were described as "Eleven cotton linings, 610 1-4 yds.; 9 cotton linings, 459 yds.; 3 6-4 woolen cloth, 201 4-8 yds." (Devoe v. Selig, 25 Misc. 411, 54 NYS 941); (3) where the property was described as "2 6–0 elliptic solid copper lining; 1 6–0 octagon, solid copper lining, full glass; 1 6–3 elliptic, zinc plated, full glass; 1 5–9 elliptic zinc plated, full glass" (Springfield Metal Casket Co. v. Wielar, 26 Misc. 863, 56 NYS 394).

[77] See infra this note.

[a] "Fifteen hundred pounds of seed cotton" is sufficiently descriptive of the article, and also of the quantity; but since the officer was required to take it into his possession, it was held very doubtful whether some further identification of the particular cotton sought to be recovered should not have been made, such as that it was a certain place, in a pen, or house, or in a pile. [b] In Wisconsin the point has not been decided but the court has expressed the opinion that it is much the safer practice to allege the value of the property in the affidavit, which is the foundation of the proceedings, and thus affirmatively show in the first instance that the justice has jurisdiction. [a] Jurisdiction dependent upon subsequent appraisement.—The rule of the text has been applied under a statutory provision that "whenever the appraised value of the property so taken shall exceed two hundred dollars the justice shall certify the proceeding upon the said writ to the district court of his county," etc. In a certain sense, it is the appraisement of the property at a sum not in excess of the jurisdictional amount that gives the justice jurisdiction to try the cause; or more correctly speaking, the justice having jurisdiction of the cause, derived from the making and filing of the affidavit, will be divested of jurisdiction to try the cause by an appraisement of the property at a sum in excess of the jurisdictional amount; but in that case will retain jurisdiction to certify the proceedings to the district court. ly as practicable, when it is impracticable to do this a statement of the aggregate value will suffice.[91]

Inferential showing. Where statutes require value to be shown, an affidavit which inferentially shows it is sufficient.[92]

Negativing value in excess of jurisdiction. Some courts hold that it is necessary to negative value in excess of jurisdiction,[93] but the necessity of this has been denied by others.[94]

Affidavit of value need not aver, after specifying the value of the goods, that such value represented the cost to defendant of replacing them should the issue be decided in his favor.[95]

[§ 110] (4) Construction.[96] A statement in an affidavit will be construed so as to avoid unnecessary technicality;[97] and where it may be so read as to give to the language a natural meaning consonant with the requirements of the statute, this course will be adopted rather than to give the instrument a strained construction which will render it defective.[98]

[§ 111] (5) Objections and Amendments—(a) Objections—aa. In General. The affidavit and requisition indorsed thereon to obtain the immediate delivery of the property in the statutory action for that purpose should be considered in the nature of process;[99] and if used in a prohibited way,[1] or for a prohibited purpose,[2] the court, upon having its attention called to the matter, has a right to ascertain the fact and vindicate its process. Accordingly, in conformity with the general rules relating to the mode of taking objection to process,[3] objections based upon irregularities in plaintiff's affidavit may be raised by a plea in abatement,[4] by rule to show cause,[5] or by motion,[6] specifying the particular irregularities or defects relied on.[7] If a writ of replevin issues without any affidavit,[8] or with an affidavit made before an officer unauthorized to administer oaths,[9] it will be set aside; and if the order for delivery is made or the writ is improperly issued without the required affidavit, which is not essential to the jurisdiction of the court over the action, the remedy is the quashal or setting aside of the writ or order, and an order for the return of the property,[10] but not a dismissal of the suit,[11] or arrest of judgment.[12] A demurrer to the declaration does not reach a defective affidavit.[13]

Petition used as affidavit. When a petition is used as an affidavit[14] its insufficiency as an affidavit cannot be objected to by demurrer,[15] but the proper remedy is a motion to set aside the writ and return the property to defendant.[16]

[91] Upton v. Pendry, 109 Kan. 744, 202 P 73, 76, 203 P 300 [cit Cyc].

[a] Thus, under such a statute a statement of the aggregate value is sufficient, and the separate value of each of two or three hundred items sought to be replevied need not be given where it would be impracticable to do so, especially where the matter is not before an inferior court whose jurisdiction would depend upon the value of the chattels in controversy. Upton v. Pendry, 109 Kan. 744, 202 P 73, 76, 203 P 300 [cit Cyc].

[93] Sager v. Shutts, 53 Mich. 116, 18 NW 580.

[a] Illustration.—Where the jurisdiction is conferred if the value of the property does not exceed a fixed sum, the affidavit which alleges a certain value within the jurisdictional amount without alleging that it does not exceed such jurisdictional amount in value is insufficient upon timely objection, because property worth more than such amount may be truly averred to be worth that sum. Sager v. Shutts, 53 Mich. 116, 18 NW 580.

[94] Dennis v. Crittenden, 42 N. Y. 542.

[a] Thus (1) it has been said that it is not a fair criticism that the property may be worth more than the jurisdictional amount, and that all the affiant means is that it is worth as much as the sum which he names as the actual value (Dennis v. Crittenden, 42 N. Y. 542); (2) and accordingly, under provisions first providing that the justice shall have jurisdiction of an action for possession of personalty "the value of which as stated in the affidavit," etc., "shall not exceed the sum of," etc., and next that before any process shall issue plaintiff shall make proof by affidavit showing the "actual value" of the property, it was held that the affidavit is sufficient if its states the value within the jurisdiction of the court without negativing the fact that the property does not exceed such amount in value, the provision that the value shall not exceed the jurisdictional amount not appearing in that portion of the statute which specifies what shall be shown by the affidavit (Dennis v. Crittenden, supra).

[a] Right to immediate possession.—Under a provision requiring the affidavit to state that plaintiffs are entitled to the "immediate" possession of the property, a liberal and natural construction of the language employed will be adopted to render sufficient the affidavit, which omits the word "immediate" but is phrased in the present tense, which will be taken to mean that plaintiffs are entitled to the instant possession. Hudelson v. Tobias First Nat. Bank, 51 Nebr. 557, 71 NW 304.

Truth of allegations in the affidavit may be inquired into to defeat the proceedings;[17] and where a material and essential allegation is found to be false, plaintiff can stand in no better position than if he had made no affidavit whatever,[18] and the court has power to set aside the proceedings[19] whether the affidavit was made fraudulently[20] or ignorantly.[21] The proper method of presenting the issue is by answer[22] and not, although there seems to be authority to the contrary,[23] by motion.[24]

Hearing of objection. Secondary evidence is admissible on the hearing of a motion to quash the writ for want of affidavit, to show that the affidavit was duly made and filed, but was afterwards lost or mislaid.[25]

[§ 112] bb. Time To Object, and Waiver. Objections to the affidavit should be taken promptly,[26] and if not seasonably taken they may be waived.[27] Thus by appearing generally and pleading without objection and trying the cause upon the merits, defendant waives informalities, amendable defects, and clerical errors therein.[28] So it has been held too late to question the validity of the affidavit after the writ is issued and served and the possession of the property secured by plaintiff,[29] after the order or writ is issued and served and there has been a defense to the action on the merits, and a verdict for plaintiff,[30] or after expiration of the time in which to reclaim the property or to except to plaintiff's sureties;[31] and a delay until time to answer has expired has been disapproved.[32] Where the affidavit in an action before a justice of the peace is jurisdictional, objections for failure to file it may be raised for the first time when the cause is removed to the appellate court and called for trial there,[33] and failure to raise the objection either before the magistrate or in the circuit court cannot operate as a waiver.[34]

[a] In New York (1) a distinction has been made between actions commenced by writ of replevin and those commenced by service of summons distinct from the replevin proceedings. McAdam v. Walbrau, 8 NYCiv Proc 451. (2) In actions of the latter type it has been held that objections to the affidavit made in support of process for the immediate delivery of property are not waived by a general appearance in the action (McAdam v. Walbrau, supra), (3) although under the earlier practice when the action was commenced by the writ, such appearance operated as a waiver (McAdam v. Walbrau, supra). (4) This distinction was not observed in an early case deciding that appearance operated to waive. Hyde v. Patterson, 1 AbbPr 248.

[b] Defect requiring dismissal if presented on time may be waived by answering without objection in an action before a justice of the peace. McKee v. Metraw, 31 Minn. 429, 18 NW 148.

[d] Omission to state value (1) has been considered a defect which is not material after appearance and pleading to the merits (Mooney v. Myers, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 331; Perkins v. Smith, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 299), (2) as where in an action before a justice of the peace, the statement of demand filed before the writ issued stated the value of the property (Mooney v. Myers, supra).

[e] Omission of "limited" after company's name in the body of the affidavit is waived by entering an appearance after having an opportunity of knowing the contents of the affidavit. Dalhousie Lumber Co., Ltd. v. Walker, 44 N. B. 81.

Excepting to sureties. Irregularities in an affidavit are waived by excepting to the sureties on plaintiff's undertaking.[35]

Defects not specified in notice of motion to vacate the writ cannot be urged as a ground of the motion.[36]

[§ 113] (b) Amendment[37]—aa. In General. In replevin, amendments may be made to meet objections to and cure defects in the affidavit, under statutes specifically relating to actions of replevin,[38] and, without the aid of any statute particularly relating to this form of action,[39] under the general rules and statutory provisions governing the subject of the amendments.[40] Amendments may be allowed to correct defective statements,[41] the affidavit not being jurisdictional,[42] and to introduce matters purely explanatory of the facts stated in the original affidavit, not amounting to new substantive matter,[43] and even to obviate objections of a substantial nature where the objection does not go to the jurisdiction of the court;[44] and, in applying these rules,[45] amendments have been permitted for the purpose of curing defective statements as to the description of the property,[46] as to the ownership, title, and right to possession of the property,[47] or as to the taking or detention.[48] But before an omission may be supplied or a mistake corrected, jurisdiction of the person, property, and cause of action must have been regularly acquired,[49] and an amendment to cure an irregularity essential to jurisdiction will not be allowed.[50] An amendment which could not obviate the objection to the remedy by replevin is properly rejected.[51]

By making new affidavit. An affidavit of ownership, informal and defective for being entitled, may be amended in this respect by the making and filing of a new affidavit[52] and a defect as to description may be corrected by a supplementary affidavit.[53] So an amendment may be allowed upon just terms by the filing of an affidavit in proper form in the place of a verification of a pleading upon belief.[54]

Amendment by agent of plaintiff other than the agent who made the original affidavit is permissible.[55]

Discretion of court. A motion to amend an affidavit in replevin is addressed to the sound discretion of the court;[56] but it has been held to be the duty of the court to allow the amendment where the ends of justice will be subserved thereby.[57]

[§ 114] bb. Time To Amend. An amendment to the affidavit may be made after issuance and execution of the order of delivery,[58] when the particular objection is raised,[59] especially when the objection is not timely,[60] or even after the objection is presented.[61] It may be allowed while the issues formed by the pleadings are being tried before a referee[62] or at any time before trial, or on the trial, where such amendment will be in furtherance of justice;[63] but the application to amend should be made before the cause is dismissed or a motion to quash is sustained.[64]

[§ 115] cc. Imposition of Conditions. Upon granting leave to amend, the court may,[65] or, as it has been held, must,[66] impose reasonable conditions as to costs. If plaintiff fails to comply therewith he forfeits only his right to amend,[67] and it is error to dismiss the case, if one is properly presented by the pleadings, for such noncompliance.[68]

[§ 116] b. Bond or Undertaking[69]—(1) In General—(a) Nature and Purpose. The bond or undertaking required in replevin proceedings to obtain possession of the property, pending the action,[70] is a substitute for the pledges at common law: plegii de prosequando, and plegii de retorno habendo.[71] Its purpose is to provide security to defendant, if he prevails, for a return of the property, and to indemnify him for such damages and costs as he may be entitled to recover,[72] and at the same time to indemnify

N. B.—Hubbard v. Young, 34 N. B. 641.

"The bond given by the plaintiff stands as security to the defendant for a proper disposition of the property, according to the order of the court." Standard Varnish Works v. Cushing, 202 Mass. 576, 581, 89 NE 163.

"The object of requiring a replevin bond to be filed before the writ is the officer,[73] the officer and defendant or person from whose custody he takes the property,[74] or, although it is given to the officer, all those interested in the trial of the right to the propery.[75]

[§ 117] (b) Necessity—aa. Replevin Bond—(aa) In General. Generally the taking of a replevin bond or undertaking is a necessary prerequisite to immediate delivery of the property;[76] and, until compliance with the requirement, the officer is under no duty,[77] and has no right,[78] to execute the process; and the want of a proper bond exonerates defendant from heeding the summons in the writ.[79] It is the officer's duty to take a bond as required by the statute,[80] and it has been held that defendant, on application to the sheriff, is entitled to see the bond before he takes any step in the cause.[81] In some jurisdictions a bond or recognizance is required before the writ can lawfully issue,[82] and plaintiff, without having given the prescribed bond, has no right to demand execution of an order of delivery,[83] or, even where the officer has taken the property in his possession, to demand a delivery of it to him.[84] In other jurisdictions before the bond is furnished, the writ may issue, and the officer may commence the service thereof;[85] but in such cases the statutes sometimes provide that he cannot deliver the property to plaintiff prior to the giving of the bond.[86] Under some provisions,[87] the officer cannot, after taking the property, do anything more than is necessary to effect an appraisement of the property, until plaintiff has given the bond required by the statute.[88] Although the statute does not distinctly provide for a bond, if provision therefor is made in the statutory form of the writ, such bond is required.[89] In some jurisdictions it is held that while it is customary for the sheriff to take a replevin bond, he is not required to do so for the protection of defendant except in replevin of goods distrained for rent.[90]

In action by state. Where a state institutes an action of replevin, in the absence of express provision therefor, it is not bound by statute requiring plaintiff in such action to furnish a bond.[91]

Jurisdiction. Omission to give bond and security before issuing of the writ may not invalidate the writ,[92] and is not jurisdictional,[93] the only effect of such omission being to subject the sheriff to an action by defendant.[94]

[a] Illustration.—Where the state, on relation of the bank commissioner, institutes an action in replevin to recover possession of personal property covered by a chattel mortgage given to secure a note which is an asset of an insolvent bank, the assets of which have been taken possession of by the bank commissioner, the state is entitled to an order of delivery without executing the undertaking required of private litigants under the statute. Morris v. State, 88 Okl. 189, 212 P 588.

[a] Thus, under a statute not requiring the giving of a bond in replevin prior to the issuance of the writ, except in actions against a sheriff, when, instead of being given to the sheriff as in ordinary cases, it is to be given to the clerk, who is also, in such case, to see to the service of the writ, the giving of the bond even in such a case, prior to issuance of the writ is not jurisdictional. Laird v. Upton, 8 N. M. 409, 45 P 1010.

[b] In justice court.—The rule of the text has been applied as to actions before justices of the peace, the bond not being necessary to the jurisdiction "to try and determine" the action, the immediate seizure of the property being a provisional remedy in the action. Fawkner v. Baden, 89 Ind. 587; Lemert v. Shaffner, 5 Ind. A. 468, 31 NE 1128, 32 NE 788. But see Allen v. Frederick, 28 Ind. A. 430, 59 NE 330 (holding bond jurisdictional, and dismissing action for failure to file one and failing to verify complaint).

[94] Vaiden v. Bell, 3 Rand. (24 Va.) 448.

Waiver.[95] Defendant may waive a bond required only for his security.[96]

New bond in case of alias writ.[97] Under a statute requiring a bond to be filed before any writ of replevin shall be issued, a new bond must be given prior to issuance of an alias writ.[98]

Pauper oath. A replevin suit cannot be instituted on a pauper oath, permitted in other kinds of actions.[99]

[§ 118] (bb) In Actions Not Involving Preliminary Seizure. Where the action may proceed without immediate delivery and the immediate delivery is not demanded,[1] it is unnecessary to file a bond in an action for the possession of personalty.[2]

[§ 119] bb. Bond or Security for Costs. Where by statute plaintiff in replevin is required to give an undertaking as security for costs or a bond conditioned to pay such costs as defendant shall recover,[3] such bond or undertaking is all that can be required of him, and it is not necessary that he should give in addition thereto any other bond or undertaking for costs.[4] Where the penalty of a replevin bond was sufficient to secure the costs of the action in addition to the other amounts secured thereby an application for an order to secure costs was refused.[5] It is otherwise where the replevin bond does not provide security for costs, in which case an additional bond for that purpose is necessary;[6] and, under a statute requiring nonresident plaintiffs to give a bond in a fixed penalty, defendant in an action to recover a judgment for the possession of personal property under the code is entitled to the security for costs, notwithstanding plaintiff had filed an undertaking not under seal in the form prescribed by the code for the purpose of obtaining the delivery of the property.[7]

[§ 120] (c) Requisites, Validity, and Sufficiency—aa. In General. The bond should conform to the requirements of the statute,[8] but where the language of the statute in giving a form is permissive, it is not necessary to follow it strictly.[9] The bond will not be rendered void for errors or defects in recitals,[10] for errors in or omissions of date,[11] or for mere irregularities in that the statute has not been literally complied with,[12] although defendant in the replevin suit might have objected thereto at the proper time in that suit;[13] and after plaintiff has obtained possession of the property in dispute by acting on the bond as a lawful and valid security, neither he nor his surety ought to be permitted to get rid of it by alleging that it is not so strong or perfect as defendant might have required him to make it.[14] It is enough that it contains all the essentials of a valid contract, and answers all the purposes intended by the statute.[15] Where the writ of replevin is void on its face, the replevin bond is also void,[16]

as is a bond executed pursuant to an unconstitutional statute.[17]

Bond good at common law. Although there is authority to the effect that no action can be maintained on a bond not in the statutory form,[18] it is held that if the instrument is good and enforceable at common law, and is not prohibited by statute, it may be enforced notwithstanding it may not be in all respects regular as a replevin bond or in strict conformity with the statute.[19]

Names of parties to action.[20] Defendant's name should appear in the bond,[21] and if it is not inserted, nor any language used from which can be ascertained in what suit the bond was given, the bond has been held fatally defective.[22]

Description of property, which is required only to be set forth in the affidavit, need not be contained in the bond.[23]

Waiver of defects. The parties to the action may waive the formalities of the statutory proceedings,[24] and, in such case, the sureties to the undertaking are bound by the waiver, and are estopped from questioning the recitals in the undertakings.[25]

[§ 121] bb. Seal. In accordance with the rules relating to bonds generally,[26] unless there are statutes providing otherwise,[27] a seal is of the essence of a replevin bond;[28] and in the absence of a seal an instrument will not be construed as a sealed bond, although there is a recital in the body thereof that the obligors have set their hands and seals thereto.[29] The seal attached to a bond executed by a corporation must be the official seal of the corporation[30] or one adopted by the corporation for the particular transaction;[31] and an unauthorized device by a subordinate officer, to take the place of the official corporate seal in a particular bond, is not sufficient.[32] A bond signed by the agent of a surety company in the course of his business is sufficient, however, even though it does not have the corporate seal of such company, where the word "Seal" is printed after the name of the company.[33]

[§ 122] cc. Acceptance or Approval. Under some statutes, before the replevying officer can lawfully deliver the property to plaintiff, the latter's replevin bond must be accepted or approved in a prescribed manner;[34] but where the statute[35] does not require that the acceptance or approval shall be made in any prescribed manner, it may be sufficiently evidenced by the conduct of the magistrate or officer authorized to act.[36] Approval of the bond, in an

[b] Approval of justice or marshal.—Plaintiff's undertaking in replevin proceedings in a district court must be approved by the justice and not by the marshal. Grotz v. Hussey, 61 HowPr (N. Y.) 448.

[c] In Massachusetts (1) Pub. St. c 183 § 12 does not require the officer to have the sureties approved. Stone v. Jenks, 142 Mass. 519, 8 NE 403. (2) Under Rev. L. (1902) c 190 §§ 15, 16, it is optional with the replevying officer to approve the sureties and thus become responsible if subsequently they are found financially insufficient, or to refer this question to a magistrate authorized to act, for his decision, and so avoid this liability; but if the latter course is adopted, defendant, under the statute, is entitled to notice in writing from the officer, stating the time and place of hearing with the names and places of residence of the sureties proposed. Parker v. Young, 188 Mass. 600, 75 NE 98.

[35] See statutory provisions.

[a] In Maine the sheriff is not required formally to approve sureties on the replevin bond. Provost v. Jodoin, 126 Me. 593, 136 A 813.

[b] In New Jersey a replevin bond does not require the approval of either the judge of the court or a supreme court commissioner, but the obligation to take a sufficient bond rests on the sheriff. Auto Brokerage Co. v. Wilson, 102 N. J. L. 425, 132 A 663.

[36] Hartlep v. Cole, 120 Ind. 247, 22 NE 130; Doe v. Cunningham, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 430; Burns v. Robbins, 1 Code Rep (N. Y.) 62; Cromer v. Watson, 59 S. C. 488, 38 SE 126.

[a] Acts constituting acceptance or approval.—(1) Where the bond is delivered to the sheriff, and he, acting upon such delivery, places the property in the possession of the principal obligor, it constitutes an acceptance and approval of the bond. Hartlep v. Cole, 120 Ind. 247, 22 NE 130. (2) If the sheriff proceeds to execute the process his approval may be inferred, and he may be permitted to indorse action brought in his court, by the federal district judge instead of by the marshal, in a state where the statute prescribes approval by the sheriff, does not render the obligation invalid.[37] Acceptance or approval forms no part of the obligation of the bond as against the obligor and sureties, and its omission does not affect its validity or render it unenforceable as against them.[38]

[§ 123] dd. Filing and Indorsement. Statutory provisions relative to the filing of replevin bonds or counter bonds must be complied with.[39] The receipt of a bond by the proper custodian and its lodgment in his office, and not the clerical act of indorsing it as filed, is the filing,[40] and it is not material that a justice of the peace failed to perform the act of indorsing it as filed.[41] That the bond was executed and filed at the proper time may appear sufficiently from its date and the fact that the justice in the writ itself certified that the bond was filed before the writ was issued.[42] The fact that the undertaking was indorsed as filed after the issuance of the writ does not affect its validity, where it was signed at a prior date and the writ recites that before its issuance an undertaking was filed.[43]

[§ 124] ee. Conditions. Ordinarily the conditions of a replevin bond are prescribed by statute,[44] and in some jurisdictions the terms of the security depend upon the cause for which the writ was sued out.[45] It is necessary only that the bond shall contain substantially the statutory conditions, and it need not follow the statute in totidem verbis[46] if the legal import is the same.[47] Although a condition may not be in conformity with the statute, liability thereon may be enforceable as upon a voluntary obligation,[48] and if a condition partly conformable to the statute contains a part not required, it is valid for the part which is good, unless the statute expressly annuls such bond.[49] The omission of a condition has been held not to invalidate the bond.[50]

[§ 125] ff. Obligors and Obligees[51]—(aa) In General. The name of the obligee should appear in the bond.[52] Where the form prescribed by the statute does not particularize to whom it shall be made payable, the court has sanctioned the form making the officer the obligee where that had become the settled practice,[53] but, although a mere clerical error does not vitiate the bond,[54] where the statute directs the undertaking as of the day it was received. Burns v. Robbins, 1 Code Rep (N. Y.) 62. (3) If a magistrate takes the bond and with his own hands sends it out of his office into the hands of an officer appointed by him, it is sufficient evidence of approval by him. Cromer v. [45] Clark v. Adair, 3 Del. 113.

[a] Thus it has been said that in case of replevin for goods taken in distress for rent, the condition of the replevin bond is prescribed by the statute to prosecute the suit with effect and satisfy the judgment, and in other cases the condition is to prosecute the suit with effect, and to return the goods, if a return be awarded. N. J.—West v. Caldwell, 23 N. J. L. 736.

[a] Thus (1) Where the condition of the bond was to prosecute to effect before A B, justice of the peace, and the justice had not final jurisdiction, it was held that the bond was not void, as not complying with the statute, which requires a bond to prosecute to effect generally. Persse v. Watrous, 30 Conn. 139. (2) A replevin bond conditioned to appear and prosecute the suit to effect, and to indemnify the sheriff, is good, although the statutory condition is to prosecute the suit with effect, and satisfy any judgment which shall be given against the sheriff in replevin. Lambden v. Conoway, 5 Del. 1. (3) A bond which, instead of providing for the return of the property and a payment of hire in the event of failing to establish plaintiff's right, as the statute prescribed, provided that plaintiff would well and truly prosecute his writ, pay all damages which might ensue to defendant and be adjudged against plaintiff and also to perform any judgment of the court is sufficient. Cooper v. Brown, 7 Dana (Ky.) 333. (4) The condition "to prosecute the suit and to return the same goods and chattels, if return thereof shall be adjudged," directed by the statute, is not essentially different from that "to prosecute the suit with effect and without delay, and to return the goods and chattels distrained in case return shall be awarded." West v. Caldwell, 23 N. J. L. 736. (5) Under the statute, requiring an undertaking in replevin to be conditioned "for the prosecution of the action without delay and with effect," an undertaking is sufficient as a statutory bond which provides "for the prosecution of the action," omitting the words "without delay and with effect," over the objection that not being good as a statutory bond an assignment was necessary. Parrott v. Scott, 6 Mont. 340, 12 P 763.

[b] Misdescription of court.—A replevin bond conditioned to prosecute the action at the "county court" next to be held at, etc., rightly describing the next term of the "common pleas" has been held to be good; the words "county court" must intend the court of common pleas. [a] Reason for rule.—Each condition is an independent obligation; and liability on that contained in the bond will be enforced. Hotz v. Bollman Bros. Co., 47 Ill. A. 378.

[b] Rule applied (1) as to omission in the bond as to the payment of the costs and damages for wrongfully suing out the writ, such condition being separate and distinct from the conditions embodied in the bond sued on. Hotz v. Bollman Bros. Co., 47 Ill. A. 378. (2) So under a statute providing that the principal and sureties to a bond shall be bound to the full extent contemplated by the law requiring the same, although defective in form, the sureties on a replevin bond which omits the statutory provision that the principal shall prosecute his action with effect are liable, where the principal dismisses his action without a determination of the merits. Rauh v. Waterman, 29 Ind. A. 344, 61 NE 743, 63 NE 42. (3) The omission of provision in an undertaking for the return of the property to defendant in the event of a judgment for such return, is not fatal but it creates a liability as far as it goes. Hicklin v. Nebraska City Nat. Bank, 8 Nebr. 463, 1 NW 135.

[54] Eickhoff v. Eikenbary, 52 Nebr. 332, 72 NW 308.

[a] For example, where the bond which was entitled in the case naming the parties, and recited the institution of the action, again naming the parties, named the obligee as fol-

a replevin bond to be given to defendant as obligee, a bond to the officer as obligee instead of to defendant is void, since it stands as a bond given to one who has no lawful authority to take it.[55] Where the bond is to be made to the officer, it is held that the officer intended by the statute is the one who in fact seizes the property,[56] and although the statute names the sheriff as the party to whom the bond is to be given, since under other provisions the coroner is required to perform the duties of the sheriff in certain prescribed emergencies, a bond in replevin given to the coroner is good.[57] It is sufficient in the replevin action if the bond is signed by the surety only, if the statute does not require more than a bond with sureties, plaintiff in replevin being liable without any bond,[58] but as to the sureties, a bond not signed by the principal obligor has been held void in an action thereupon.[59] Where the form of the recognizance required is a joint and several bond, inasmuch as the recognizors are jointly and severally liable, it is immaterial to defendant in the replevin which of the obligors is styled principal and which surety, as both are in legal effect principals,[60] and it is not necessary to its validity that the name of the surety is not mentioned in the body of the bond.[61] A statute requiring the bond of plaintiff and one surety is directory,[62] and a bond containing two sureties in not void thereunder.[63] A partner may sign as principal in behalf of himself and copartners,[64] but a bond executed by one claiming to execute it as agent for plaintiff, but having in fact no authority, will not authorize service of the writ.[65] A statutory requirement that the replevin bond be "executed" to the sheriff does not mean that the sheriff should be the obligee.[66] A bond naming the sureties as individuals in its body, and signed as by a corporation with the individuals designated as officers thereof, is sufficient as a bond of individual sureties, such designation being merely descriptio personæ.[67]

[§ 126] (bb) Sufficiency of Surety. Although the English statute requiring two securities to a replevin bond[68] may not be in force,[69] under statutes requiring the bond to be executed "with sufficient sureties,"[70] it has been decided that defendant in replevin is entitled to two sureties therein,[71] independent of plaintiff[72] who cannot be taken as a surety.[73] When permitted by statute,[74] however, a surety company may properly be accepted as sole surety on a replevin bond.[75] The solvency of plaintiff in the replevin suit does not dispense with the necessity for the number of sureties required by statute on the bond.[76] In a bond executed by a partnership, one of the several copartners is no additional security within a statutory requirement of security additional to the financial responsibility of plaintiffs.[77] But a bond which the statute requires to be given with two or more sureties is not void because actually signed and delivered by one surety only.[78] The sufficiency of the sureties has been said to be a matter which does not in any way affect plaintiff in the replevin suit, but is a matter entirely between the sheriff and defendant in the suit.[79]

Next friend of infant may become surety in a replevin bond, where the infant is plaintiff and there is a cosurety;[80] and a requirement of two sureties independent of the party is thereby satisfied.[81]

Residence. Under a statute requiring two sufficient sureties on a replevin bond, mere nonresidence in the state has been held not to disqualify a surety.[82] On the other hand, there is authority to the effect that an officer is not bound, or even permitted, to accept as securities persons not residents of the court in which the proceedings are pending.[83] One who rents and occupies a business office within the state is a "householder or freeholder,"[84] and may be a surety on a replevin bond.[85]

[§ 127] gg. Justification. In the absence of statute the validity of a replevin bond is not affected by the failure of the sureties therein to justify.[86] Provision, however, is usually made by statute for the justification of such sureties, and when so required they must justify in the form and manner prescribed.[87] Under some statutes if defendant duly excepts to the sufficiency of plaintiff's sureties,[88] it is the duty of plaintiff either to procure a satisfactory justification of his sureties,[89] or to furnish another undertaking to the same effect as the original one, with other sureties who must then appear and justify,[90] and if neither of these things are done, it is the duty of the officer who seizes the property to return it to defendant to remain in his possession until the case is finally disposed of.[91] So if the sureties fail to justify, upon such an exception, it is a defect in the proceedings which affects the substantial rights of defendant and for which a judgment against him will be reversed,[92] except where they attend and are ready to justify, but defendant's counsel does not request it, and the trial proceeds on the merits without objection to the failure to justify.[93]

Justification of party. A party cannot be taken as surety by the sheriff,[94] but as to whether a party to the action who, with a surety has signed the bond, must justify depends upon the intent of the sheriff when he received the undertaking.[95] Both the persons who signed it must justify unless the sheriff dispenses with the party and considers his name as improperly signed,[96] which with the consent of the surety[97] the sheriff can do if he approves the undertaking with one surety only.[98]

[§ 128] hh. Amount of Penalty.[99] The obligation or penalty of a replevin bond should be in an amount sufficient to secure a return of the property or an equivalent value,[1] and the statutes[2] usually require that this amount shall be at least double the value of the property. A bond for costs only does not comply with such a requirement.[3] Where the statute fixes the penalty of the bond at twice the value alleged in the affidavit, it is error for the court, no affidavit being made, arbitrarily to fix the amount.[4] The fact that the penalty is in more than double the value of the property is no ground for quashing the writ;[5] and a bond for less than double the value of the property is not for that reason void,[6] but may be good at common law,[7] and, although it may be good ground for a motion in arrest of judgment,[8] defendant may waive the defect and accept the bond.[9] A bond omitting to fix the amount or penalty is, as to the sureties thereon, void.[10] So, where the penalty is "double the value of the property hereinafter named to be replevied," without stating what that value is, the bond is invalid,[11] and if an objection be reasonably taken, the action of replevin must be dismissed.[12]

Criterion of value. Although there is authority to the effect that the amount of the bond should be based on the value alleged in the verified complaint,[13] the criterion of the value of the property has been said to be not that stated in the declaration[14] or the affidavit,[15] but the estimated value to be ascertained at the time the bond is given.[16] In an action to replevy goods distrained for rent, it has been held proper to base the penalty of the replevin bond on the value of the goods as fixed by the appraisers on the distress.[17]

[§ 129] (d) Operation and Effect.[18] The giving of the replevin bond determines nothing concerning the ultimate right of the parties to the property;[19] it simply determines the right to its custody pending the outcome of the suit.[20] A bond given by plaintiff in a replevin suit to obtain possession of property in order to foreclose it stands in place of the property to the extent of defendant's interest,[21] and the property passes into the exclusive possession and control of plaintiff.[22]

[§ 130] (e) Defects and Objections[23]—aa. In General. If an officer serve a writ of replevin without first taking bond according to the provisions of the writ, defendant may avoid the process by plea in abatement,[24] and, although a contrary rule has been applied where the writ was not executed,[25] it is held to be a good ground for quashing or vacating the writ or requisition that plaintiff has not given a proper bond;[26] but if a sufficient bond is filed before the application is heard, the writ will not be quashed.[27] A valid bond being a condition precedent to the service of a writ of replevin,[28] plaintiff cannot, by ratification of an invalid bond, after service of the writ, validate such service.[29] A defect apparent upon the face of a replevin bond may be taken advantage of by a motion to dismiss,[30] or by either a motion to dismiss or a plea or answer in abatement.[31] A demurrer cannot be used to object to the form of the replevin bond.[32] Where the defect in such a bond does not appear upon its face, it should be suggested and shown to the court by proof,[33] and so the sufficiency of a nonresident surety's property within the state can be attacked only by a plea in abatement[34] and not by motion to dismiss.[35] When proceedings in replevin are quashed for such defect, plaintiff cannot contest, by the introduction of testimony, the right of defendant to a return of the property.[36]

Place of filing and hearing. Exceptions to sureties may, it has been held, be filed with the clerk of court[37] and need not be indorsed on the bond[38] or on the writ.[39] Under a statute requiring the prothonotary to fix the amount of the bond, exceptions thereto should be filed with,[40] and be heard by,[41] him.

Parties. A motion to quash a replevin bond cannot be made in the name of the surety only without joining the principal.[42]

Notice of a motion to quash is not necessary where the defects are apparent on the record.[43] A statute requiring defendant to give notice to the sheriff that he excepts to the sufficiency of the replevin bond has been held not applicable to such a bond taken by a constable in an action pending before a justice of the peace.[44]

[§ 131] bb. Curing Defects by Amendment.[45] It has been held that the court may allow a replevin bond to be amended so as to conform to the statute;[46] and the right of amendment is frequently expressly conferred by statute.[47] Thus plaintiff on payment of costs may amend, by filing a new bond with sureties, and the sureties justifying;[48] and under the same terms a replevin bond, imperfect in itself, and executed with but one surety, may be amended, after service of the writ.[49] But where replevin is brought by plaintiff as an individual, the bond cannot be amended by adding after his name the word "executor."[50]

Substitution of surety. Sureties on a bond can be changed by order of court.[51] But where defendant excepts because one of the sureties fails to justify[52] and a new surety is substituted, a new undertaking should be executed;[53] and the original undertaking cannot be altered by inserting therein the name of the new surety, without the consent of the other surety, or of those for whose benefit or protection it is required to be given.[54]

[§ 132] cc. Time To Object, and Waiver.[55] Defects and irregularities in a replevin bond, not jurisdictional, but such that defendant may waive them, are deemed waived by defendant's neglecting to object, and pleading[56] or proceeding to trial on, the merits;[57] or by executing and filing a good and sufficient redelivery bond;[58] or by failure to make objection at the earliest opportunity,[59] or within a reasonable time,[60] or within the time prescribed by statute,[61] or limited by rule of court for filing dilatory pleas,[62] or before entry of judgment.[63] A motion to dismiss must be made within the time prescribed for filing pleas in abatement.[64] Exceptions to the sureties are filed in time if filed within the statutory period after the return day of the writ,[65] notwithstanding such writ was filed before the return day.[66]

[§ 133] (2) Increase of Penalty, and New or Additional Bond.[67] If defendant does not elect to hold the property himself, he may take measures to see that the security given by plaintiff for a return of the property, in case a return should be adjudged, is sufficient.[68] Under some statutes a defective or insufficient replevin bond may be amended,[69] a new or additional bond may be filed nunc pro tunc,[70] or a new bond may be ordered filed within such time as may be directed.[71] For example, a new or additional bond may be filed so as to cure a bond which is defective in not providing for a sufficient penalty,[72] or for not having the required sureties;[73] and under statutes authorizing the court to order filing of a new bond, such bond may be required in any case where it becomes necessary for the proper security of defendant,[74] or where the original bond is insufficient for any reason.[75] It may be authorized when the original is attacked by plea in abatement.[76] There is, however, authority to the effect that the court cannot require plaintiff to file a new bond;[77] and defendant may waive a new or additional bond, as by going to trial upon the merits without objection.[78] So a new or additional bond cannot be required where defendant has retained possession of the property by giving a delivery bond,[79] where the property has been placed in the custody of the court,[80] or if the bond which is given is sufficient and regular under the statute.[81] The giving of a new bond does not operate to release the old.[82]

Jurisdiction of a justice to determine a pending application for a new bond does not, in the absence of statutory provision, cease upon the return day of the writ.[83]

[§ 134] c. Writ, Order, and Summons—(1) Nature of Writ. A writ of replevin is a writ of summons as opposed to a writ of attachment;[84] but although, in addition to the other purposes for which it is assumed, it is made to perform an office analogous to that of a summons, it is not a summons within the meaning of a statute prescribing the time within which a summons should be returnable.[85]

[§ 135] (2) Issuance—(a) In General. At common law and under some statutes an action of replevin is commenced by a writ of replevin commanding the officer to whom it is directed to replevy the goods and deliver them to plaintiff and to summon defendant to appear and answer the taking and detention;[86] but under other statutes the action is commenced by a summons,[87] and a writ or order for the delivery of the property, which has, under such statutes, taken the place of the old writ of replevin, not only is not essential to the commencement of the action,[88] but cannot be issued until after the action has commenced by the service of summons,[89] and furthermore the maintenance of the action is not dependent on such an order being issued,[90] as such order is merely ancillary,[91] and confers no title, but covers only a temporary right which may terminate upon a judgment against plaintiff.[92] Under some of such statutes, after plaintiff in replevin has complied with the statutory requirements as to the filing of a proper affidavit and bond,[93] it is the duty of the clerk of court forthwith to issue an order or writ for the replevin of the property designated,[94] which duty is purely ministerial.[95] A writ of replevin may be issued in one county to replevy goods in another county.[96] Where the writ has become lost, it should be restored by a copy thereof.[97] After a statute prescribing the mode of issuing writs is repealed, a writ issued thereunder is void.[98]

Time of issuance. The writ, it has been held, should be sued out by plaintiff in time for the pleadings to be perfected at or before the next term of court.[99]

[§ 136] (b) Alias and Pluries Writs. As in case of the issuance of process generally,[1] where an original writ of replevin is improperly executed or for some other reason fails fully to subserve the purpose for which it is issued, an alias writ may be issued,[2] and if an alias writ proves to be ineffectual, a pluries writ may be issued.[3] The alias or pluries writ may be issued by order of the court[4] or without such order,[5] but there must be no delay in the prosecution of the suit.[6] Where two writs issue on one affidavit, the issuance of the second does not invalidate or render void the first or the proceedings under it.[7]

Alias summons may be issued where the original summons in a replevin suit is irregular.[8]

[§ 137] (3) Requisites and Sufficiency—(a) Writ or Order—aa. In General. A writ or order of replevin should comply with all requirements as to matters of form or contents prescribed by statute,[9] or rules of court.[10] It should be directed to the officer who is authorized to serve it,[11] and against the person who has the possession or custody of the property involved,[12] and who is a party or the agent of a party to the action.[13] Thus where the property has been seized under process or attachment, it should be directed against the sheriff or other officer who has the custody of the property.[14] The process should be made returnable at or before the next term of court,[15] or within the time prescribed by statute.[16] It should also be made to appear in the writ that a legal bond was given, where such bond is a prerequisite to the issue of the writ;[17] but it is not necessary that the bond should appear at length on the face of the writ.[18] It is not essential that the writ should disclose the fact that the property to be replevied belonged to plaintiff or had been impounded or distrained;[19] nor need the writ show that the affidavit required by statute had been made by plaintiff.[20] Mere irregularities or informalities will not ordinarily invalidate the writ,[21] and if it is regular on its face, it will protect the officer who serves it because it is his duty to execute such process without investigating the cause of action.[22] A writ directed to the sheriff and commanding him to hear the cause and do justice to the parties, which writ is in the form of the old English writ of replevin issuing out of chancery, is irregular under modern practice.[23]

An immaterial variance between the writ and the copy served is no ground for abatement.[24]

[§ 138] bb. Description and Value of Property. A writ or order of replevin must specify the particular property to be replevied, and describe it with such a reasonable degree of certainty that the property may be identified and delivered to plaintiff[25] but as a general rule it is not necessary that the writ should allege the value of the property to be replevied.[26] This rule, however, does not require a greater certainty of description than the nature of the property will reasonably admit of,[27] and although the description is general in its terms, if it is sufficiently full and definite to enable the property, with outside help, to be pointed out to or identified by the officer executing the writ, it is sufficient.[28] If there is no uncertainty as to the property to be taken, and the right property is taken, a variance between the description in the affidavit and that in the writ is immaterial;[29] but if the writ insufficiently describes the property the sheriff or other officer may refuse to execute it.[30] The requirement of a description in the writ is not satisfied by a description in the affidavit annexed to the writ,[31] but, on the other hand, a writ is not defective because the schedule of articles is on a separate paper attached to the writ instead of being written on the paper on which the writ is printed.[32] Under a statute authorizing the replevying of "goods," a writ may command the taking of both beasts and chattels.[33]

[§ 139] (b) Summons. Under some statutes provision is made for the commencement of an action of replevin by a summons,[34] which must comply with the statutory requirements as to matters of form,[35] although it is usually sufficient if it fairly apprises defendant of the fact that the action is an action of replevin, of the name of plaintiff and his attorney, of the court whence the writ issued, and the time and place for defendant to appear.[36] A formal variance between the writ and summons as to the nature of the action, as where the writ is in the detinet and the summons in the cepit et detinet, is immaterial.[37]

[§ 140] (4) Service and Execution—(a) In General. The court has no jurisdiction to render judgment in a replevin suit where no service of process has been made on defendant,[38] unless service is waived by him.[39] Service of a writ of replevin must be made within the time,[40] and in the manner,[41] prescribed by statute; and under some statutes[42] it has been held that compliance with the statutory provisions as to service of the writ of replevin gives the court complete jurisdiction so as to enable it to control subsequent proceedings in the action, notwithstanding a failure to serve the summons.[43] In the absence of statutes defining the powers of officers in executing the writ, the common law furnishes the rule of procedure.[44] A plaintiff after demand need not delay serving his writ in order that defendant may satisfy himself that the demand is rightfully made.[45]

Service in another county.[46] Where service of process in an action of replevin has been properly made on an agent holding the property within the county in which suit is brought, summons may issue and be served in another county on his principal who claims the right to possession as against plaintiff.[47] So a writ of replevin made returnable to the county in which the property is detained may be served in another county to which the property has been transferred after the beginning of the suit.[48]

Service by publication has been held insufficient.[49]

Service of affidavit. Where there is no statute so providing, service of the affidavit in replevin is not sufficient service of process.[50]

[§ 141] (b) Who May Serve. Unless the proper officer to serve a writ of replevin is designated by statute,[51] it is immaterial whether it is served by a sheriff or by a constable.[52] In many jurisdictions the statutes provide that the coroner is the proper officer to serve the writ where the sheriff or his deputy is a party to the action,[53] or is interested in the case;[54] but a remote or contingent interest of the sheriff which may arise and grow out of the suit afterward is not such an interest as authorizes a coroner to serve the writ,[55] and it has been held that a sheriff may properly execute a writ against

[b] In Missouri a town marshal who is appointed as special constable by a justice of the peace, under the provisions of Rev. St. § 6149, has no authority or power to execute a writ of replevin. Mitchell v. Shaw, 53 Mo. A. 652.

[a] Officer as party.—(1) The term "party," as used in the Maine statute, is confined to persons whose names are expressly mentioned in the record as plaintiff or defendant, and does not forbid the service of a writ of replevin by a deputy sheriff on one in whose hands another deputy to the same sheriff had placed the goods replevied, for the purpose of safekeeping, after having attached them as the goods of a person other than plaintiff in replevin. Douglass v. Gardner, 63 Me. 462. (2) Where the action is brought neither by nor against the sheriff, the writ is properly directed to, and executed by, him. Stacy v. Farnham, 2 HowPr (N. Y.) 26.

54. See statutory provisions.

55. Browning v. Bancroft, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 88.

[a] Action against deputy.—The interest of the sheriff must be that his deputy.[56] A coroner authorized to execute a writ of replevin may appoint a special deputy to do it,[57] but under a statute authorizing a constable to appoint a deputy with the consent of the county judge, no power to execute an order of claim and delivery is conferred upon a deputy appointed without such consent.[58] A city marshal, empowered to serve any process which a constable may serve, may serve a writ required by statute to be served by a constable,[59] but county patrolmen, in the absence of statutes so providing, are not authorized to make such service,[60] notwithstanding authority in them to make such arrests and searches and seizures as sheriffs may make.[61] Where a statute provides that unexecuted process remaining with the sheriff at the expiration of his term of office shall be executed by his successor, the word "process" includes the proceedings which authorize a sheriff to take the property in replevin;[62] and one who had seized property in such proceedings and returned it to defendant after taking an ineffective redelivery bond cannot, after expiration of his term, be compelled to retake the property and deliver it to plaintiff.[63]

[§ 142] (c) Taking Property under Writ or Order—aa. In General. The officer to whom the writ or order of replevin is directed should execute it by taking and delivering the property as commanded therein,[64] and he has a right to enter defendant's place of abode for that purpose[65] provided he can enter peaceably;[66] but only the property described or set forth in the writ or order,[67] or in the affidavit,[68] when found in the possession of defendant himself or his agent,[69] may lawfully be taken. The officer executing the process may seize the property before serving defendant with a writ or copy thereof,[70] and he must take the property before returning the writ.[71] Where he has not returned the original writ, he has the right to complete the service thereof by taking and delivering the property described in it, although he has previously delivered a copy of the writ to defendant named therein.[72] It has been held that the officer is not obliged to execute the writ unless some one attends to point out the articles he is to deliver.[73]

What constitutes valid levy. In order to constitute a valid levy, the act of taking possession must as a general rule be of such a character as will make the officer, if not protected by the writ or order, liable as for a trespass.[74] It is not necessary that he should actually remove the property from the premises of defendant, but it is sufficient that he place his deputy or agent in possession,[75] or he may, with plaintiff's consent, leave the property in the possession of defendant;[76] and so, upon taking a receipt the judgment in the suit will bind or conclude some valuable right or pecuniary interest of the sheriff. The sheriff has no such interest in an action of replevin by a third person against one of his deputies. Browning v. Bancroft, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 88.

Dyer, 26 Miss. 243 (containing also a dictum that the deputy cannot execute a writ against the sheriff, the distinction being that the sheriff acts in his own name, and by virtue of his official authority while the deputy acts in the name of the sheriff, and by virtue of the authority from him derived); Carson v. therefor, the property may be left with defendant[77] or a third person.[78]

Finding only part of property. In the absence of a statute otherwise providing[79] it seems that the sheriff is not bound to take a part of the goods unless he can find them all.[80]

[§ 143] bb. Use of Force in Taking Property. As a general rule the officer to whom a writ or order of replevin is directed may use whatever force is reasonably necessary to enable him to execute it.[81] But, although some authorities have declared the common law to be otherwise,[82] it has been held that, in the absence of statute, such officer ordinarily is not justified in breaking open an outer door or window in order to execute the writ or order,[83] and, if he does so, he commits a trespass which makes his subsequent acts unlawful, and justifies a householder in resisting his further progress.[84] Accordingly, when an officer in the execution of a writ finds an outer door or window slightly ajar but so obstructed as to require force to overcome the obstruction, he may not use such force,[85] for such an entrance would constitute a breaking.[86] An officer may, however, be justified in breaking open the outer door of a building which is fraudulently used to protect the property from legal process,[87] after demanding that the goods be delivered to him;[88] and, where he has taken possession of the property in partial execution of the writ, he may on his return to complete the levy break open an outer door if necessary.[89] Where, however, the officer has lawfully entered or been admitted into the building, he may, if necessary, break open an inner door in order to reach the property called for in the writ.[90] Statutes, providing that before the officer is justified in breaking open a door or building in order to execute the writ he must publicly demand the delivery of the property, and grant a reasonable opportunity therefor,[91] have been held applicable to a dwelling house[92] or a vault[93] in which the property may be found; but no demand is necessary where the property is in an untenanted or unoccupied house.[94]

[§ 144] (d) Failure To Take Property.[95] Usually the jurisdiction of the court to proceed in the cause and award the possession or the value of the property to the party entitled thereto is not ousted by a failure to take the property, caused either by an absence of demand by plaintiff for immediate possession,[96] or by the inability of the officer to find and seize the property.[97] An express stipulation by

[a] Rule applied where the wrong property was taken possession of by the officer. Babcock v. Ashmead, 24 Kan. 585.

[b] In Mississippi the statute, allowing plaintiff to proceed to recover the value of the property on "a failure to take the goods," applies only to a case where defendant secreted or refused to deliver the property on proper demand therefor being made by the officer. Meyer v. Mosler, 64 Miss. 610, 1 S 837.

the parties that the right of property in one of the chattels, which was embraced in the pleadings but not taken under the writ, should be submitted to the jury, confers full jurisdiction of the question upon the court.[98] At common law, when the goods sought to be replevied were concealed or removed beyond the reach of the officer, a writ of capias in withernam, authorizing the taking and detention of other goods of defendant, might issue.[99] Statutes sometimes provide that, where the property claimed has not been taken, the action may proceed as one for damages only.[1] Such statutes, however, are intended to apply where the officer has not obtained possession of the property under the order of delivery issued to him,[2] and not where the property, after being seized by the officer, is returned to defendant upon the giving of a forthcoming bond.[3]

[§ 145] (e) Citation on Disposal and Concealment of Property. Under a statute providing that, where it appears by affidavit that property has been disposed of or concealed so that the writ of replevin cannot be executed, the court, upon verified petition therefor, may compel defendant's attendance and examine him as to the situation of the property, the proceedings cannot be instituted where the sheriff's affidavit negatives both the allegations of disposal and concealment required in the petition.[4] So an unverified petition in addition to the sheriff's affidavit is insufficient;[5] and an application purporting to be a "second amended and substituted petition to cite defendant" is not sufficient under such statute where the only previous paper filed by plaintiff was his original petition in the replevin suit and the amendment thereto.[6]

[§ 146] (5) Defects and Objections[7]—(a) In General. The proper remedy to obtain a quashal of the writ for defects in the writ itself,[8] or in the proceedings taken to obtain it,[9] is by motion; demurrer cannot be used to object to authority of the officer serving the writ.[10] The motion should be made after service[11] and return[12] of the writ, and before issue joined[13] or raised for the jury;[14] but where there are two or more defendants, one of them cannot, by pleading, conclude the others of their right to attack irregularities in the proceedings by motion to quash;[15] and a void writ may be attacked after defendant has pleaded,[16] or on the trial.[17] So it has been held that after appearance, defendant may move to quash for a material defect,[18] as that the writ failed to specify the property,[19] but it is then too late to move to quash the writ on the ground that the goods are not described with sufficient particularity.[20] The writ will not be quashed where a clear case has not been made out,[21] nor on motion of the sheriff where he is not a party to the action;[22] and a formal defect in the writ which may be remedied by amendment is not sufficient to require quashal.[23] Where, in replevin for several chattels, the sheriff seized part of the property in the county in which the action was properly brought, and the rest in another county to which it had been taken after the commencement of the action, the court could not quash the writ, although the second seizure was illegal.[24]

Nature of motion. A motion to quash goes to the technical regularity of procedure,[25] and not to the merits of the case.[26]

Notice of motion. Statutory provisions and rules of courts providing for notice of the motion to set aside a writ or order must be complied with.[27]

Effect of quashal. A quashal of the writ on the motion of one defendant operates as a dismissal or discontinuance as to all,[28] and defendant is ordinarily entitled to a return of the property,[29] but not to an assessment of damages, where the writ was quashed for nondescription of the property seized.[30]

Useless writ. Where an alias writ is useless, it is immaterial whether the court grants or overrules a motion to quash it, as no injury can accrue under either view.[31]

[§ 147] (b) Curing Defects by Amendment. Informalities and irregularities in a writ or order of replevin may, upon seasonable application made by plaintiff therefor, be amended[32] so as to make it conform to the affidavit and bond,[33] or so as to correct a mistake or insufficiency in the description of the property;[34] and such an amendment has been allowed on motion by defendant to quash or dismiss.[35] A writ, however, will not be amended where the effect thereof would be to introduce a new cause of action;[36] neither will it be amended in an action for conversion defended on the ground that the goods were taken under a writ of replevin in another suit.[37] A void writ cannot be amended.[38]

[§ 148] (c) Waiver.[39] Informalities or irregularities in a writ or order of replevin may be waived by defendant by his appearing, pleading, and proceeding to trial on the merits of the case without objecting thereto,[40] or by failing to object before expiration of the time limit for filing dilatory pleas;[41] and an objection on the ground of insufficiency of the undertaking is waived by applying for a new undertaking.[42] So, where defendant does not take exception to defects in the service at the term when he enters appearance,[43] or before trial,[44] he cannot take it afterward. But a general appearance does not waive the illegality of the writ[45] or radical defects therein;[46] neither is a general appearance a waiver where, due to the defect, defendant was not bound to heed the summons in the writ.[47]

[§ 149] d. Return of Writ—(1) Necessity. After service the officer must, in strict compliance with the controlling statutory provisions,[48] make a return of the writ showing that it was duly served.[49] There is no duty on defendant to see that the writ is returned.[50]

[47] Taylor v. Adams Express Co.,

[§ 150] (2) Construction and Sufficiency. A fair construction will be given the return when its sufficiency is questioned,[51] and a statement of the substantial facts will be held sufficient.[52] So a return is sufficient where it shows that defendant was served in the manner required by law,[53] notwithstanding evident clerical errors contained therein.[54]

Appraisement. Under a statute requiring an officer, upon taking the property, to cause it to be appraised,[55] it is not necessary that it appear in the officer's return that defendant was requested to appoint an appraiser;[56] nor is it necessary that it appear that the parties did not agree as to the value of the property,[57] although, when they do so agree, such agreement must be certified in order to excuse the nonappointment of appraisers.[58]

[§ 151] (3) Conclusiveness; Impeachment or Contradiction. The return, when made, is conclusive upon the parties,[59] or at least prima facie evidence of the facts which are set forth therein.[60] But it is conclusive only in so far as it is responsive to the precept,[61] and, when sufficiently definite,[62] is not collaterally impeachable.[63] It is not, however, conclusive as to facts not stated therein.[64]

[§ 152] (4) Defects, Objections, and Amendment. The writ or requisition may be quashed where a proper return has not been made within a reasonable time,[65] as where the return was not signed;[66] but it has been held that failure of the officer to comply with directory provisions of a statute in regard to reporting the assessed value of the property is not ground for quashing the writ.[67] The return may be amended upon proof of mistake,[68] and, when it is substantially correct, other facts not stated therein may be supplied by reference to other parts of the record.[69]

Waiver of objection. An objection that no return was filed by the sheriff is waived by failure to raise it in the replevin suit.[70]

[§ 153] e. Appraisement. In jurisdictions where the statutes require the officer, immediately upon taking property in replevin, to cause it to be appraised by disinterested persons,[71] it is his duty so to proceed[72] upon demand and tender of indemni-

[a] In South Carolina, as there is no penalty attached by statute or rule of court for the failure of the sheriff to file the affidavit and notice, required by Code § 238, with the clerk within twenty days after taking the property, his noncompliance with the statute does not invalidate the proceedings. [a] Opportunity to file redelivery bond.—A sheriff's return showing goods seized on the day of service and not showing when they were delivered to plaintiff, but reciting that such delivery was because defendant did not give a delivery bond within twenty-four hours after service, is not susceptible of an interpretation that the goods seized were delivered to plaintiff without giving defendants twenty-four hours for filing a redelivery bond. [b] Place of appraisement.—(1) An officer serving a writ of replevin has no right, after he has taken possession of the goods, to keep them in defendant's shop against his consent for the purpose of having them appraised (Steuer v. Maguire, 182 Mass. 575, 66 NE 706), (2) although he has a right to a reasonable time to ascertain which are the goods that his writ calls for, and to remove them, his right to occupy the shop then ceasing (Steuer v. Amendment of appraiser's certificate. The court may, in its discretion, allow the appraiser's certificate to be amended upon proof satisfactory to itself.[75]

[§ 154] B. Proceedings for Redelivery[76]—1. Nature and Purpose. In some jurisdictions, it is provided by statute that, at any time before the delivery of the property to plaintiff, defendant may require the return thereof upon giving a prescribed bond or undertaking conditioned for the delivery of the property to plaintiff, if such delivery be adjudged, and for the payment to him of such sum as may be adjudged against defendant;[77] and sometimes, upon his also making affidavit that he is the owner of the property or entitled to possession, and serving upon the sheriff written notice that he requires the return thereof.[78] The purpose of such statutes is to secure to defendant speedy relief where property is wrongfully seized in replevin.[79] But, under the controlling statutes, it has been held that, where defendant in replevin claims no adverse title to, or ownership of, the goods in the suit, but only a lien upon them, he has no right to give a counter bond and retain possession of the goods.[80] Even where there is not statutory authority therefor, a claim property bond may be given in replevin, where the procedure is sanctioned by long usage;[81] but in such case defendant has no right to retain the chattels by giving a claim property bond unless he has a general or special property which entitles him to possession.[82] Where chattels not specified in plaintiff's affidavit are seized, defendant's remedy is not by giving bond for redelivery of such chattels,[83] but he should proceed against the sheriff as a trespasser.[84]

[§ 155] 2. Compliance with Requirements—a. In General. In order to avail himself of the privilege of retaining the possession of the property, compliance by defendant with the conditions precedent imposed is necessary,[85] and failure to comply therewith entitles plaintiff to possession.[86] The initial steps in obtaining redelivery must be taken within the time limited by the statute,[87] and the officer is required to hold the property a designated[88] or reasonable[89] time before turning it over to plaintiff, in order to give defendant an opportunity to give such bond, if he so desires. If the officer fails to do so, a writ of de retorno habendo pendente lite will be issued upon entry by defendant of proper security.[90] When the proceedings are commenced in time,

St. (1910) §§ 5010, 5011 provide that where defendant in replevin for ordinary property fails to give, within forty-eight hours of the levy, an undertaking to produce the property and pay any damages awarded by the judgment, plaintiff may have the property on the execution of an undertaking to duly prosecute and pay all costs and damages. Section 5015, provides on a failure of the plaintiff's suit by lack of prosecution or on demurrer, for the assessment of proper damages to the defendant. Title to the property delivered to plaintiff under the provisions of the statute passes to him by the delivery as no provision is made for its return. Hunt v. (2) This practice, however, was changed by the act of April 19, 1901, permitting defendant or an intervening party to file a counter bond within seventy-two hours after replevy of goods and requiring the sheriff to remain in possession of them during that time. they may be completed so as to entitle defendant to a return of the property at any time before final determination of the action;[91] but there is authority to the effect that, after the officer has accepted plaintiff's bond and delivered the property to him, the court will not compel the officer to accept defendant's bond and deliver to him such property.[92] The redelivery bond in an action before a justice of the peace, it has been held, must be taken by the officer levying the writ;[93] and in the absence of statutory provision therefor, the counter bond should be filed with the sheriff where that has been the uniform practice,[94] and he is responsible for its sufficiency.[95]

Failure to take proceedings to reclaim the property has been held, as a matter of law, to concede plaintiff's right to possession.[96]

[§ 156] b. Requisites, Validity, and Sufficiency—(1) Bond or Undertaking—(a) In General. Under some statutes the bond of defendant is couched in the same language as that of plaintiff, in so far as it relates to the payment of money;[97] and a condition which states substantially that, if defendant is not successful in the suit, he and the sureties will pay whatever judgment is rendered against him is sufficient.[98] A redelivery bond is not fatally defective because it runs to plaintiff instead of the sheriff,[99] or to the sheriff instead of plaintiff, it being conditioned for the delivery of the property or payment of its value not to him, but to plaintiff,[1] or because an unnecessary recital is inserted[2] or omitted,[3] or because it is signed by the sureties only.[4] Signature of the sureties by mark, with attestation, in literal compliance with the statute governing the same, constitutes a sufficient signing;[5] and two sureties are not required under a statute requiring a bond "with security to be approved by" the officer executing the writ.[6] An undertaking in which the sureties assume no obligation is void,[7] notwithstanding it has been approved by order.[8] A bond not violating a statute or contravening public policy, although invalid as a statutory bond or undertaking, may nevertheless be good as a common-law obligation.[9]

Consideration. The inconvenience, loss, or detriment resulting to plaintiff from a return of the property to defendant constitutes a legal and sufficient consideration for a redelivery.[10]

Attachment or execution bond. A bond to indemnify the sheriff on seizure of property under attachment or execution is not sufficient as a redelivery bond in replevin.[11]

Noncompliance with alleged conditions. In the absence of any notice to the obligee or the sheriff respecting alleged conditions under which a redelivery bond was signed, and where it is regular on its face and duly approved, it is valid and binding on the sureties, notwithstanding noncompliance with the alleged conditions.[12]

[§ 157] (b) Justification. Where the statute so requires, defendant must have sureties on his bond or undertaking justify.[13] The time within which justification must be had is not limited,[14] and a justification completed at any time before the final determination of the action is sufficient.[15] Where the justification has been commenced and suspended, the court may fix a method by which it may be resumed at the pleasure of plaintiff,[16] statutory provisions relating to the adjournment of the justification being directory and not mandatory.[17] Justification by the sureties in accordance with the statutory provisions governing the same is sufficient,[18] and a new justification will not be ordered for insolvency where it does not appear that the insolvency of the sureties has arisen since they justified, or that their financial condition was unknown to plaintiff at the time of their approval by the court.[19]

[§ 158] (c) Amendment. The court possesses the same power and discretion as in other actions to allow an amendment[20] or the filing of a new[21] or additional[22] security.

[§ 159] (d) Order of Approval. An order of approval of the sufficiency of sureties, who have assumed no binding obligation, is nugatory and of no effect.[23] Where the statute provides that, upon approval of the undertaking, the sheriff is exonerated from liability, a provision to that effect is proper in the order approving the undertaking.[24]

[§ 160] (2) Affidavit. The sufficiency of the affidavit required by some statutes will depend on the statute.[25] It has been held sufficient when it contains the allegations required, although made on information and belief,[26] and when made by an agent or attorney of defendant, provided it sets forth the reason why it is not made by the party and the matter constituting the grounds of his belief.[27]

[§ 161] 3. Operation, Effect, and Construction. The redelivery bond in replevin is a substitute for the property only in those cases where a delivery of the property cannot be had on final judgment.[28] It stands in place of the property as security for the payment of the value thereof,[29] so that plaintiff may rely on it exclusively,[30] but not so as to entitle defendant, after judgment against him, to pay the assessed value and retain the property.[31] Thus the effect of defendant's rebonding is to turn the suit into an action for damages for the value of the property or for the return of the goods to plaintiff, at his option.[32] The redelivery bond admits possession of the property to be in defendant at the time of the levy of the writ,[33] and it operates as a waiver of objections to the sufficiency of the description thereof in the complaint,[34] and, by giving it and obtaining a redelivery of the property, defendant waives his right to object to the insufficiency of the proceedings taken by plaintiff to obtain a delivery;[35] but such bond does not admit the title[36] or the right of possession[37] of the identical property described to be in plaintiff. A valid approved bond is a fixed contract between the sureties and plaintiff, which cannot be changed or disturbed by the court, except by consent of the parties.[38] General rules[39] apply in construing bonds given to obtain redelivery of the property in replevin.[40]

[a] In Pennsylvania (1) the retention of the property by defendant under bond was formerly held to extinguish plaintiff's title and the case proceeded as one of trespass (Watterson v. Fuellhart, 169 Pa. 612, 32 A 597; Rockey v. Burkhalter, 68 Pa. 221; Fisher v. Whoollery, 25 Pa. 197; Swope v. Crawford, 16 Pa. Super. 474, 18 LancLRev 177; Schuckers v. Schuckers, 21 Pa. Butler, 10 Kulp 273), (2) and a condition in defendant's redelivery bond for a return of the property was void (Moore v. Shenk, 3 Pa. 13, 45 AmD 618; Chaffee v. Sangston, 10 Watts 265; Snyder v. Frankenfield, supra). (3) But since the passage of the Replevin Act of April 19, 1901 the rule has been changed (Schuckers v. Schuckers, 21 Pa. Dist. 608), (4) and plaintiff may now at his option proceed to recover the property by a writ of retorno habendo with an added clause of fieri facias as to damages awarded and costs (Schuckers v. Schuckers, supra).

[a] Bail bond or delivery bond.—A bond made payable directly to the sheriff is a bail bond under Crawford & M. Dig. § 8645, executed for the sheriff's protection in case defendant in replevin failed to surrender herself, the words "for the use and benefit of" plaintiff, added after the name of the sheriff, who had no personal interest in the replevin proceedings, not being essential under the statute to make the bail bond valid, and, when construed with the capias clause, showed no intention to constitute a delivery bond under § 8649. Daniels v. Wagner, 156 Ark. 198, 245 SW 487.

failure of the sheriff to permit defendant to give bond and retain the property.[41]

[§ 163] 5. Defects and Objections. Neither defendant[42] nor his surety[43] may object to an irregularity in the taking of a redelivery bond from defendant. Reasons going to the merits of the case will not justify striking off a counter bond on motion.[44]

[§ 164] 6. Waiver of Right. Where defendant, at the time the sheriff serves the papers and seeks to take possession of the property, tenders to the sheriff a cash bond to retain it, he thereby waives his right to tender a delivery bond.[45] So, under the statutes prevailing in some jurisdictions, it has been held that defendant waives his right to give bond and regain possession of the property by excepting to the sufficiency of the sureties on plaintiff's undertaking;[46] and such right cannot be restored by countermanding his exception to the sureties after the expiration of the statutory time allowed for claiming a return.[47]

[§ 165] 7. Restoration of Property Taken from Custody of Court.[48] The court in an action of replevin has power to direct plaintiff to restore property to the custody of a court from which it was wrongfully taken in the suit.[49]

[§ 166] C. Delivery to Third Persons or Interveners—1. Third Persons. Sometimes under statutory provision a third person, not a party to the action, may obtain possession of the property at any time before actual delivery thereof to either party by delivering to the sheriff an affidavit embodying his claim, and upon plaintiff failing to indemnify the sheriff.[50] Under such statutes, when plaintiff fulfills the conditions by furnishing security, he is entitled to retain possession of the property.[51] The claim of a third party may be set up by his agent,[52] but the property should not be delivered to a third party claimant who has not served an affidavit of claim in compliance with the terms of the statute[53] or given proper security for its return, if required.[54]

Remedy not exclusive. The remedy furnished by the statute is not exclusive, and does not bar a third person from maintaining an action of replevin for the property,[55] or becoming a party to the action by intervention.[56]

[§ 167] 2. Interveners.[57] An officer levying on property under a writ of replevin must, before making delivery to plaintiff, give a third person having a right to intervene in the suit a reasonable time to give a counter bond.[58] Where the intervener claims only a part of the chattels replevied, the amount of the bond he is required to furnish depends on the value of that part of the property claimed by him.[59]

[§ 168] D. Impounding Property. It is sometimes provided by statute that, when defendant gives a counter bond for goods replevied and retains them, plaintiff may, by making proper affidavit and furnishing bond, have the property impounded in the custody of the sheriff or some other person.[60] The affidavit of plaintiff under such statute, that by reason of the nature of the property the actual pecuniary value of the property replevied will not compensate him for its loss, is conclusive on the court,[61] and, upon his compliance with the requirements of the statute, the court must order such property impounded.[62] The purpose of the remedy being the preservation of the goods exactly as they are when suit is instituted,[63] they ought never to be impounded with either of the parties to the controversy.[64]

[§ 169] E. Custody and Care of Property.—1. In General. Where the execution of the bond need not precede the issuance of the writ,[65] the officer is authorized to seize the property under the writ and hold it a reasonable time for plaintiff to give the bond required by statute;[66] but under some statutes he cannot, prior to the giving of the bond, deliver the property to plaintiff.[67] On giving bond, however,[68] and upon expiration of the time for filing a redelivery bond,[69] plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the property in dispute during the pendency of the action,[70] unless defendant elects to retain the possession and pursues the statutory requirements prescribing the procedure in such cases.[71] If in excess of his power and authority an officer takes property into his possession without having received the bond intended for the protection and security of defendant, he is under no obligation to retain such property,[72] and it is his duty at once to restore it to defendant.[73] So, if plaintiff neglects or refuses to give the bond required in a reasonable time, the officer should redeliver the property to defendant.[74] If the writ or order of replevin has issued improperly without the affidavit required as a condition precedent thereto,[75] goods taken under it must likewise be returned.[76] Property which has been replevied does not pass into the possession of plaintiff, after he has given a bond which has been accepted by the officer, until there is a formal delivery of the property.[77]

On abatement of the writ the temporary right of possession falls with it.[78]

[§ 170] 2. Nature of Possession. From the moment an order of delivery in replevin is executed by taking possession of the property named therein, such property is in custodia legis,[79] and it continues so to be as long as the property actually remains in the manual possession of the sheriff.[80] Whether property when in the possession of plaintiff is in custodia legis or not is a question upon which the authorities are not entirely in accord.[81] The question mainly depends for its solution upon statutory provisions.[82] Although there is some authority to the effect that, upon transfer by the sheriff to one of the parties to the suit, the possession of the court is at an end,[83] it has been held that, where the statute or the party's undertaking provides for a return of the property to the other party, if he so elects, in case the judgment is for him, no title to the property vests in the former on its delivery to him,[84] but it remains in the custody of the law;[85]

[a] Causes for difference.—Much of the difference arises from diverse statutory regulation, and some of it may be ascribed to the fact that some cases treat a replevin bond as similar in all essential respects to a forthcoming bond, while other cases draw a distinction between the effect of the writ when used by a third person to recover possession of property that has been seized by an officer under judicial process, and when it is used to recover property from a private citizen. [a] Rule applied (1) in an action of replevin by a third person against plaintiff in another pending replevin suit (Hagan v. Deuell, 24 Ark. 216, 88 AmD 769; Buckley v. Buckley, 9 Nev. 373), (2) even though defendant in the pending suit was the agent or bailee of plaintiff in the later action (White v. Dolliver, 113 Mass. 400, 18 AmR 502).

[b] In Minnesota (1) it has been said without qualification that, after delivery of the property by the officer to a party to the action, it is no longer in the custody of the court. Katz v. Hlavac, 88 Minn. 56, 92 NW 506. (2) This case has, however, been explained as one in which the question of title was not in issue, the language of the court being characterized as unguarded. and, while there is some authority to the contrary,[86] the rule in some jurisdictions is that the party in possession cannot sell the property pending the action,[87] or pass title thereto even to a bona fide purchaser.[88] Neither can the goods ordinarily be levied upon under attachment[89] or execution,[90] or in another action of replevin.[91] The party's possession is one which his adversary has no right to disturb or contest.[92]

Ownership in party in possession. A plaintiff in replevin who is the real owner of the goods replevied may, of course, deal with them as his own;[93] and, as against a person who, whether he is plaintiff in the suit or defendant asking for a return of the property seized by plaintiff therein,[94] is merely seeking to obtain possession to enforce a lien on the property, the party in possession may dispose of the property pendente lite,[95] and give good title to the purchaser,[96] and thereafter the holder of the lien must look to the bond for protection.[97] So, where property distrained for rent is replevied by a party claiming to be the general owner, the lien of the distrainer is lost,[98] and he is remitted to the replevin bond.[99]

Absence of condition for return. Where property is delivered to plaintiff upon the giving of a bond in double the value of the goods, and not conditioned for a return of the property, such bond, it has been held, is a substitute for the property, and plaintiff in the writ, while so in possession, can make a good title to the property to purchasers thereof, notwithstanding upon the trial of the replevin there is a verdict for defendant.[1]

[a] In Missouri (1) the property is treated in custodia legis pending the litigation so far as the parties to the replevin suit are concerned. Mohr v. Langan, 162 Mo. 474, 63 SW 409, 85 AmSR 503; Ely v. Sutton, 177 Mo. A. 546, 162 SW 755 (parties, grantees, or privies). (2) But as to third persons the property is not in custodia legis so that it cannot be levied upon by any other kind of judicial process. Mohr v. Langan, supra; Coen v. Watkins, 62 Mo. A. 502. (3) Early cases left the law in an unsettled state (Mohr v. Langan, supra); (4) thus, cases have proceeded on the idea that the property after it is turned over to plaintiff in replevin is in custodia legis as to third persons (Bates County Nat. Bank v. Owen, 79 Mo. 429 [overr Mohr v. Langan, supra]), (5) that it is not in custodia legis (Donohoe v. McAleer, 37 Mo. 312), (6) and that even the true owner cannot disturb the possession of a party to a replevin suit, this being laid down as a general rule without qualification as to the rights of a true owner not a party to the replevin action (Hawkins v. Taylor, 15 Mo. A. 238).

[b] Reach of other processes.—The property is as free from the reach of other processes as it would have been in the hands of the sheriff. Hagan v. Lucas, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 400, 9 L. ed. 470.

[a] Motion to stay.—Where a forwarding company deposited plaintiff's goods with defendant, and plaintiff replevied the same, the receipt made in the name of the forwarding company being lost, and the forwarding company denying all interest in the goods, it was held that, as defendant was protected by the replevin bond, its motion to stay plaintiff from disposing of the property until the negotiable receipt was returned, or an order of the court furnished under Gen. Business L. § 100, which provides for delivery to an owner who has lost a negotiable receipt, by order of the court on which an indemnity bond must be given, should be denied, for that would result in a trial of the merits on a motion to stay. Brown Shoe Co. v. Vandam Warehouse Co., 186 App. Div. 718, 175 NYS 68.

[b] Injunction.—(1) Where, on defaults in payments, the seller replevied a machine on the buyer's refusal to surrender it under the terms of a chattel mortgage, and the buyer did not rebond, the seller need not await the determination of the replevin action, before disposing of the property by sale, even though the buyer had made due demand for the return of the machine, because the seller would be answerable only for the machine or its value if the buyer were ultimately successful in the action. O. B. Brush Corp. v. Weiner Bookbinding Co., 120 Misc. 101, 198 NYS 566. (2) Where goods are replevied and a bond is issued, an injunction will not be granted to prevent their disposal, the remedy of the party from whose custody they are taken being to rebond the goods. Brown Shoe Co. v. Vandam Warehouse Co., 186 App. Div. 718, 175 NYS 68.

[a] In Ohio (1) it was formerly held that, when one, claiming the right of property and of possession to personal property, brings replevin against the person having the actual possession, and, claiming property in the goods, causes the goods to be seized and delivered to him, and

As bailment. The rights of a party who has replevied property are those of a bailee who might be required to return it.[2]

Unauthorized taking and retention. Property taken and retained by the sheriff without authority of law cannot be regarded as in the custody of the law.[3]

[§ 171] 3. Hearings To Determine Possession Pending Suit. Statutes sometimes provide for proceedings to determine who may have possession of the property pending the suit.[4] Such proceedings are available to plaintiff as well as defendant.[5] In them the court will not try the case on the merits,[6] but will merely determine to whom the property will be awarded.[7] Thus, where the statute permits a party to have such proceedings instituted where the property involved had an especial value that could not be satisfied in money,[8] the single question for the court is whether that is the fact,[9] and other questions are immaterial.[10] Articles of especial value within the statutory meaning may include articles which could be replaced,[11] and are not confined to irreplaceable works of art or skill or documents or records.[12]

[By Joseph W. Rouse]

[§ 172] A. Declaration, Petition, or Complaint—1. In General—a. Form and Requisites.[13] In an action of replevin as in other civil actions the complaint must allege facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action,[14] and to show that it exists in favor of plaintiff,[15] and against defendant.[16] The complaint must state in clear and concise language the facts upon which plaintiff bases his right and which entitle him to recover,[17] and it must allege facts and gives a bond with surety, as required by the statute, the bond takes the place of the property to the extent of the interest of defendant in replevin, and to that extent plaintiff in replevin becomes invested with the property. Crittenden v. Lingle, 14 Oh. St. 182, 84 AmD 370; Smith v. McGregor, 10 Oh. St. 461; Hunt v. Williams, 7 Oh. Cir. Ct. 224, 4 Oh. Cir. Dec. 568; Knight v. Kinney, 7 Oh. Cir. Ct. 59, 3 Oh. Cir. Dec. 662. (2) But under the amendment of April 4, 1891, of the Ohio Replevin Law (88 Oh. L. p 273), the bond no longer vests title to the property. Knight v. Kinney, supra.

[b] Description of parties plaintiff.—(1) A declaration in replevin in which plaintiffs described themselves as "trustees of the Colored Zion Baptist Church of Denver, who sue for the use and benefit of said church," is good on demurrer, whether the beneficiary is a corporation or a mere voluntary association. Shipton v. Norrid, 1 Colo. 404. (2) The omission of the names of the parties from the body of the complaint is not a fatal defect, when the names appear in the title thereof. Scott v. Vulcan Iron Works Co., 31 Okl. 334, 122 P 186.

[c] Confusion of names of plaintiff.—In an action of replevin by the "C. H. Hardy Auto Company" to the use of "Harry Thomas," to recover an automobile leased by the auto company to defendant, where there was indorsed on the agreement an assignment by "C. H. Hardy" to Thomas, and the statement of claim avers that the auto company had assigned its interest to Thomas, and this averment is not denied in the affidavit of defense, no question can be raised by defendant as to a confusion of names of the legal plaintiff, and it is immaterial whether the auto company was a corporation, a trading name, or an individual. not matters of evidence,[18] or legal conclusions,[19] and it should allege the material facts distinctly and separately, instead of assuming them.[20] The material facts to be alleged are plaintiff's ownership, either general or special, of the property, describing it, his right to its immediate possession, and the wrongful taking or detention thereof by defendant,[21] and a complaint which states these essentials ordinarily sufficiently states a cause of action,[22] except where it is necessary to allege a demand,[23] it being unnecessary to anticipate and negative matters of defense.[24] In some jurisdictions statutes provide what allegations the petition shall contain,[25] and a petition containing all the required allegations states a cause of action.[26] But where the form of complaint is prescribed by statute, it need not be literally followed, it being sufficient if the statute is substantially complied with,[27] and if the statute does not prescribe any particular form of complaint, it is sufficient if it contains a plain and concise statement of the cause of action,[28] and it is not always necessary to allege in the complaint everything that is required to be stated in the affidavit.[29] A declaration or complaint is not demurrable for failure to state a cause of action if the facts stated are sufficient to constitute any cause of action against defendant,[30]

[a] Declaration, petition, or complaint states a cause of action where it alleges: (1) Ownership, right to possession, and detention, but does not allege defendants' fraud or bad faith in obtaining the goods sought to be replevied. Shapiro v. Wolf, 126 Misc. 564, 214 NYS 48. (2) That a chattel mortgage was executed and delivered to plaintiff by defendant covering the personal property described, and providing when it should become due; that the chattel mortgage was breached, and plaintiff was entitled to possession of the personal property described therein, which had been demanded; and that defendant refused to deliver the property for foreclosure. Hivick v. Oklahoma-Colorado Oil, etc., Co., 89 Okl. 181, 212 P 420. (3) That bonds belonging to plaintiff were deposited with defendant bank as a bank and banker, that they were plaintiff's property, and that plaintiff had made demand on the bank and its receiver therefor, which was refused. Bates v. Capital State Bank, 18 Ida. 429, 110 P 277. (4) That plaintiff claimed a certain horse, that he was entitled to immediate possession, and that it was wrongfully detained by defendant, who made the false claim of being the owner thereof, and that the horse was not taken from plaintiff for tax or fine as under an order or judgment against his property. Climer v. Aylor, 123 Ark. 510, 185 SW 1097. (5) That plaintiff deposited stock, covered by a certificate which also covered stock owned by defendant, with defendant for sale, and that after a reasonable time defendant refused to return it or its value. Wentz v. Linthicum, 76 Cal. A. 486, 245 P 205. (6) That plaintiffs owned and were entitled to immediate possession of property described in the affidavit made a part of the complaint, that defendant's possession was wrongful, that the property was of a stated value and had been seized under the affidavit of claim, and then returned to defendant on his execution bond, and demanding judgment for the delivery of the goods or for their value with damages for detention. Hare v. Grantham, 158 N. C. 598, 74 SE 102.

[c] Omission of time, place, and value does not render a complaint alleging plaintiff's ownership and defendant's unlawful taking and detention, bad as against general demurrer. Clay, etc., Co. v. Martinez, 74 Colo. 10, 218 P 903.

[a] Compliance with statutes.—A statute requiring that, where the action is in the detinet and does not allege a wrongful taking, the complaint may allege with requisite certainty of time, place, and value, a receipt of the property by defendant from plaintiff or from some other person to be delivered to plaintiff, and that, although requested he has refused to deliver the same to plaintiff, must be followed. [a] Illustration. — Notwithstanding code and charter provisions, as to the custody and disposition of property seized by the police, a complaint to recover of the person from whom it is alleged the police wrongfully seized the property, against the property clerk of the police department, to whom it was delivered and who is alleged to have refused plaintiff's demand therefor, and to have delivered it to the succeeding clerk, with knowledge of all the facts, states a cause of action; the statutory remedy not being exclusive. Duboff v. Haslan, 195 App. Div. 117, 186 NYS 481.

[b] Divisible declaration.—If defendant demur to the whole declaration, part of which is sufficient, and the residue not, the demurrer will be overruled, if the matters alleged be even though such facts may not be sufficient to sustain the particular cause of action upon which the complaint may seem to be based.[31] If the complaint states a cause of action in replevin, the fact that it also alleges a conversion of the property by defendant to his own use does not change the form of action,[32] or deprive plaintiff of his right to a recovery of the property, if the evidence upon the trial justifies such relief.[33]

The sufficiency of declaration, petition, or complaint is determined by its averments,[34] and it is not affected by defects in the affidavit,[35] nor by the name given to the pleading or cause of action.[36] A complaint which is otherwise sufficient is not defective because of failure to ask immediate delivery of the property.[37]

Affidavit as complaint.[38] The affidavit required to be filed in an action of replevin has been held to be no part of the pleadings.[39] The facts set forth in the affidavit form no part of the issues of the case,[40] unless they are again set forth in the pleadings.[41] In some jurisdictions however where the action is brought before a justice of the peace, the affidavit is the only pleading required,[42] and in others, it has been held that an affidavit filed without a separate complaint, but containing all the essentials of a complaint, is to be treated as both affidavit and complaint.[43]

Prayer for judgment. The omission of a prayer for judgment is not fatal where it is apparent what judgment plaintiff would be entitled to.[44]

[§ 173] b. Conformity to Writ or Affidavit.[45] Where the proceeding in replevin is begun by the issuance of a writ of replevin,[46] the declaration or complaint should not include any property not taken under the writ[47] but where the action is begun by the service of summons in which it is not required that the property shall be specified, the declaration may properly include all of the articles described in the writ, although in consequence of directions given by plaintiff a part of them only was seized by the officer and the summons served described only the articles seized.[48] The declaration need not include all of the property described in the affidavit on which the requisition to the sheriff, to cause the property to be delivered to him, is founded.[49] In general there should be a substantial correspondence between the petition and the affidavit,[50] but the affidavit not being necessarily a part of the pleadings,[51] its allegations will not control as to the evidence to be offered,[52] and a variance between the allegations of the petition and of the affidavit as to the character of the ownership of plaintiff[53] or as to the description of the property[54] is not material.

[§ 174] c. Venue.[55] Replevin at common law and under most of the statutes is regarded as a local action,[56] and the complaint should contain allegations of venue,[57] and should allege the place from which divisible in their nature. Newell v. Newell, 34 Miss. 385 (holding that a declaration in replevin, for the recovery of a chattel and for damages for the wrongful taking or detention, is divisible, and hence a demurrer to the whole will be overruled if it be sufficient so far as it relates to the specific recovery of the chattel, although defective in reference to the damages claimed).

[55] Allegations as to venue in declarations or complaints generally see Pleading § 138.

Venue in actions of replevin see supra § 88.

[57] Parvis v. Truax, 12 Del. 575, 32 A 1050; Metropolitan Credit Corp. v. Anderson, (N. J. Sup.) 118 A 581; Byers v. Ferguson, 41 Or. 77, 65 P 1067, 68 P 5; Stiles v. James, 2 Wash. T. 194, 2 P 188.

[a] Where no venue was laid in the complaint, and it did not state where the taking of the property occurred, or where it was retained, the complaint was insufficient. Metropolitan Credit Corp. v. Anderson, (N. J. Sup.) 118 A 581.

[b] Allegations held sufficient.—Where it was alleged that all the parties resided in a certain county, and inferentially that all transactions took place there, the complaint is not bad for failure to allege that the property was present in that county where the property was taken,[58] and show the county in which the property is wrongfully held at the time the action is instituted.[59] In some jurisdictions it has been held that the venue must be alleged as of a particular place within the town or parish,[60] but in other jurisdictions it is held that, except perhaps in replevin of property seized in distress for rent,[61] it is sufficient if the venue is laid within the town[62] or county.[63] In some jurisdictions it is held that in actions of replevin brought before a justice of the peace, it is not necessary to allege detention of the property in the county in which suit is brought,[64] and in others it is held that the venue is sufficiently laid if it appears in the margin of the complaint instead of in the body.[65]

[§ 175] d. Surplusage. Allegations in the declaration or complaint which are not necessary to the statement of plaintiff's cause of action may be disregarded as surplusage.[66] A complaint which otherwise states a good cause of action and the relief demanded is in harmony therewith is not demurrable for the inclusion of unnecessary and irrelevant allegations and demanding judgment for more than the facts warrant.[67]

[§ 176] e. Verification.[68] The statutes ordinarily require that the declaration, complaint, or petition in an action of replevin shall be verified,[69] and in the absence of such verification the writ cannot legally be issued;[70] but unless the statute so requires, the verification need not be by plaintiff in person,[71] but it may be by an agent,[72] or by plaintiff's attorney.[73] A verification by an agent which fails to show for whom he acts is insufficient.[74] If the verification contains the proper allegations for the purpose of a verification the fact that it contains additional allegations will not vitiate it, but such additional matter may be treated as surplusage.[75]

[§ 177] f. Time for Filing and Serving. In the absence of statute, the rules applicable to filing and service of a declaration, petition, or complaint in civil actions generally[76] apply in actions of replevin.[77] The provisions of statutes if any as to the filing and service of the declaration must, it has been held, be strictly complied with.[78] When a statute limits the time within which a declaration or complaint must be filed or served after return of the writ, it cannot be filed after the expiration of that period,[79] or served until the writ is returned.[80]

[§ 178] g. Exhibits, Bills of Particulars, and Copies of Instruments.[81] An exhibit containing a description of the property must, in order to become a part of the complaint, be attached thereto.[82] A bill of particulars is not necessary in an action of replevin before a justice of the peace where the action is instituted by the filing of an affidavit,[83] since the affidavit contains all that is necessary to be stated in a bill of particulars and may be considered as such.[84] A bill of particulars, one item of which was an undivided interest, is not objectionable where it does not show that the property could not be divided.[85] In an action of replevin to recover a written instrument it is not necessary to set out a copy thereof in the complaint.[86]

[82] Riley v. Pearson, 21 Or. 15, 26 P 849 (holding that it is not sufficient to file the exhibit as a separate paper, although it is referred to in the complaint and alleged to be a part thereof).

[§ 179] 2. Title and Right to Possession—a. Title. The complaint in an action of replevin must allege either a general or special ownership of the property in plaintiff.[87] This should be done by a direct and issuable averment and not by allegations of the evidence of such ownership,[88] or allegations of legal conclusions growing out of the fact of ownership;[89] and so it is not sufficient merely to allege that plaintiff is entitled to possession,[90] nor to allege a wrongful detention by defendant.[91] In the absence of any statutory provision so requiring, the declaration or complaint need not allege in specific words a general or special ownership or interest[92] if words of equivalent import are used,[93] or if it alleges facts which show plaintiff's ownership or from which ownership may be implied.[94] It is sufficient to allege plaintiff's ownership in general terms,[95] without setting out the evidence, source, or nature of his title;[96] and, although plaintiff unnecessarily attempts to set out the facts constituting such ownership, his complaint is nevertheless good if these allegations are not derogatory of the general allegations of ownership;[97] yet if plaintiff chooses to set out the source, evidence, or nature of his title, his right of recovery is restricted to that derived from the specific facts alleged.[98] If plaintiff bases his right of recovery upon a special ownership in the property, he must in his complaint set out the facts in relation thereto;[99] but if the facts alleged show plaintiff to be the owner of the property, it is not a fatal defect that he erroneously denominates his interest as a special property.[1] In some jurisdictions statutory provisions require a statement of the facts upon which plaintiff bases his title.[2] Where several persons join in an action of replevin, the declaration or statement must allege a joint ownership or joint right to possession.[3] In an action by a husband and wife jointly, the declaration must show the wife's title to the property.[4]

Pa.—Elsasser v. Elsasser, 29 Pa. Dist. 698.

[a] Application of rule.—(1) In an action by a guardian an allegation that "plaintiff as guardian," etc., "is entitled to the possession," is a sufficient allegation of ownership (Hoke v. Applegate, 92 Ind. 570); (2) and in an action by an assignee for the benefit of creditors, it is sufficient for him to allege generally that he is the owner and entitled to possession without alleging that he is the owner as assignee (Krug v. McGilliard, 76 Ind. 28); (3) and a trustee suing need not set out how the trust was created or his title accrued (Skipton v. Norrid, 1 Colo. 404). (4) Where plaintiff relies on an assignment, the consideration of the assignment need not be alleged. Vogel v. Badcock, 1 AbbPr (N. Y.) 176.

Property in defendant is not pleaded by an averment in the complaint that defendant "acquired" the property.[5]

In actions before a justice of the peace it has been held unnecessary in some jurisdictions to allege ownership, as right to possession is all that need be alleged.[6]

[§ 180] b. Right to Possession. As replevin is a possessory action[7] the complaint should allege that plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the property,[8] but this need not be alleged in express terms,[9] it being sufficient if the complaint alleges facts which show that he is so entitled.[10] It has been held, however, that it is not a sufficient allegation of plaintiff's right to possession to allege merely that he is the owner of the property,[11] or that it is wrongfully detained by defendant,[12] or to allege both ownership and a wrongful detention,[13] since the ownership and right of possession may be in different persons,[14] and the allegation of wrongful detention is merely a conclusion of law;[15] but on the contrary it has been held that it is sufficient if the complaint alleges both ownership in plaintiff and a wrongful detention by defendant,[16] or if it merely alleges that plaintiff is the owner of the property.[17] An allegation of right to immediate possession, without allegation of either general or special ownership, is bad for the reason that the allegation of right to possession, standing alone, is a legal conclusion.[18] Where plaintiff relies upon a special ownership in the property, he must set out in his complaint the facts in relation thereto which entitle him to its possession.[19] If it is alleged that plaintiff is the owner and entitled to possession, it is not necessary to allege that he is lawfully entitled to the property.[20]

[a] In Pennsylvania (1) although St. (1920) § 18973 requires plaintiff to set forth the facts upon which his title is based, if defendants claim no interest in the property except that given to them by a lease from plaintiff, plaintiff need not prove and so need not aver anything in regard to the prior title. "There can be no such thing as a wrongful detention of property from a plaintiff where he is not entitled to the possession. So that where there is an averment of ownership, whether general or special, with an averment of wrongful detention, by the defendant, the plaintiff must, by necessary implication, aver that he is entitled to the possession." [§ 181] c. Right to Possession at Commencement of Action. Since plaintiff must have an immediate right to possession at the commencement of the action,[21] the allegations in the declaration or complaint of his ownership and right of possession must be as of the time that the action is instituted,[22] and it is not sufficient to allege that he was so entitled upon some specified date which was prior to the institution of the action,[23] even though it is further alleged that plaintiff demanded possession of the property,[24] and that defendant still wrongfully detains the same;[25] but if in addition to an allegation of ownership and right to possession on a certain prior date, it is alleged that plaintiff was then in possession and defendant wrongfully took the property, the right to possession at the time of the action is sufficiently alleged.[26] It need not be alleged in express terms that plaintiff is entitled to the possession at the time the action is instituted if facts are alleged which show that he is so entitled,[27] and if it is alleged generally that plaintiff is the owner and is entitled to the possession of the property, it is not necessary to allege expressly that he is entitled to the immediate possession,[28] particularly where it is further alleged that defendant wrongfully took and detained the property.[29] A complaint alleging that plaintiff's assignor was the owner until assignment and that previous to the commencement of the action plaintiff was assigned the property is good against a general demurrer.[30] Allegations as to ownership and right to possession, if made in the present tense, are sufficient as to right to possession at the time the action is commenced,[31] and this, although the complaint was not filed until several days after its verification.[32] A mere allegation of ownership is not a sufficient allegation of right to possession at the commencement of the suit,[33] as the owner may not be entitled to possession,[34] but the complaint should state facts from which it can be inferred with reasonable certainty that plaintiff is so entitled.[35]

[§ 182] 3. Description and Value of Property—a. Description. In an action of replevin the complaint must describe the property sought to be recovered with reasonable certainty,[36] more particularity be-

[a] Thus a complaint, alleging that plaintiff was the owner of a steer when it was taken from him, but not alleging that plaintiff was entitled to the possession at the time the action was commenced, which was some two years later, is insufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff. Almada v. Vandecar, 94 Or. 515, 185 P 907.

[c] The proximity of the date named to that on which the action is instituted does not alter the principle of the rule, and the complaint is insufficient, although it alleges ownership and right of possession on a date only one day prior to the institution of the action. ing required in such an action where the property itself is sought to be recovered than in trespass, case, or trover, where the action is merely for damages,[37] although where the statute requires an affidavit to be delivered to the sheriff particularly describing the property, the complaint need not describe the property with the same particularity as the affidavit.[38] The description must be sufficient to identify the property, and to enable the officer to distinguish it from other property of like character,[39] and to enable defendant to know what property he is charged with detaining in order that he may prepare his defense to the action;[40] but if the property is thus clearly identified, the description is sufficient,[41] and if the identity of the property is shown, an error in the description is not fatal.[42] So also, where circumstances render a specific description impossible, a more general description may be sufficient if the circumstances are stated by way of excuse and are a sufficient excuse.[43] If the property has undergone a material change, it must be described as it existed at the commencement of the suit.[44] As shares of stock in a corporation cannot be replevied,[45] the complaint must describe or refer to the certificates representing such shares of stock.[46]

Fixtures. In replevin of an article which may be a fixture, it has been held necessary that the complaint allege such facts as will show it to be personalty,[47] but the contrary has also been held.[48]

Where the property sought is an undivided part of a quantity of property, uniform in quality and value and susceptible of fair and equal division by count, measurement, or weight, the description of the property sought, as such undivided fractional part, is sufficiently specific.[49] Reference to a description in an exhibit, attached to the petition, is insufficient to remedy a failure of the petition to describe the property.[50]

[§ 183] b. Value. There is some conflict of authority as to the necessity of alleging in the complaint the value of the property sought to be recovered, it having been held in some cases that no allegation of value is necessary,[51] as in cases of actions brought in courts of general jurisdictions,[52] or that it is not necessary if the action is in the detinuit,[53] and that an allegation of value, if made, is a mere matter of form;[54] while on the other hand, it has been held that there must be an allegation of value,[55] or at least where plaintiff seeks to recover the value of the property in case possession thereof cannot be delivered to him,[56] and that the allegation of value is a material allegation.[57] So also, it has been held in some cases that a general allegation of value is sufficient without stating separately the value of the different articles sought to be recovered,[58] and in others that the separate value of each article must be stated.[59] Under a statute requiring that the value of the property must be found,[60] the complaint must allege value, so that issue may be joined thereon.[61] Under a statute requiring the affidavit to state the value,[62] when the affidavit so states it, the petition need not.[63]

[§ 184] 4. Taking, Detention, and Possession by Defendant—a. In General. As it is necessary that there be a wrongful taking or detention,[64] the complaint must not only allege ownership or right of possession in plaintiff,[65] but in order to state a cause of action in replevin it must allege either a wrongful taking or a wrongful detention of the property by defendant;[66] but having sufficiently alleged a wrongful taking, it need not in terms allege detention,[67] although it is proper to do so when necessary to make the complaint conform to the writ.[68] At common law replevin was spoken of as being in the cepit or in the detinet,[69] it being necessary in the former to allege a wrongful taking,[70] but not a wrongful detention,[71] which was necessary only in the latter,[72] although counts in the cepit and detinet might be joined.[73] Under the statutes, it is held that the formal distinctions between replevin in the cepit and detinet have generally been done away with,[74] and the gist of the action being defendant's wrongful detention,[75] this must be alleged in the complaint;[76]

but it is not necessary to allege a wrongful taking,[77] unless both are relied upon to state a cause of action.[78] While the allegation of wrongful detention need not be made in express terms,[79] it must be made with reference to defendant,[80] and as of the time when the action is instituted;[81] and this is ordinarily, so far as defendant's connection with the property is concerned, all that is necessary.[82] A complaint which alleges that plaintiff was and is the owner and in possession of the property, alleges that plaintiff was in possession at the time of the action, and hence shows plaintiff had no cause of action.[83] A statute which requires that where the action is founded upon a wrongful detention, the complaint must set out the facts showing that the detention was wrongful must be complied with;[84] but if the complaint alleges a wrongful taking, it is not necessary to set out the facts showing that the detention was wrongful.[85] Where the action is based upon a wrongful detention, allegations as to the circumstances under which defendant obtained possession are mere surplusage.[86] It has been held that averments as to cause of detention are merely formal averments not making an issue.[87] In an action against an officer to recover property under writs of attachment issued in separate suits, the complaint need not state in separate counts what part of the property was taken under each writ.[88]

Officers seeking to replevy property taken from them after seizure under an attachment must allege facts showing that the property was subject to attachment.[89]

[§ 185] b. Negativing Taking for Tax, Assessment, or under Process. In the absence of statute, it is not necessary for the complaint to allege that the property in question was not taken for a tax, fine, or assessment or seized under execution, attachment, or other process,[90] and a requirement that such facts shall be stated in the affidavit does not apply to the complaint.[91] In some jurisdictions, however, these allegations are required in actions before a justice of

[c] Allegations insufficient.—(1) A complaint alleging that a person other than defendant took a building from plaintiff's land and put it upon defendant's land, and that defendant has refused to deliver it to plaintiff or to permit him to remove it, but which does not allege or show that defendant, although owner of the land, exercises or can exercise any control over the building, does not show an unlawful detention thereof by defendant. Tozier v. Merriam, 12 Minn. 87. (2) A complaint showing defendant was put in possession of the property under an executory contract to buy, so that his possession was rightful in the first instance, should show possession has become wrongful by breach of the contract by defendant, demand for possession by plaintiff, and refusal by defendant; and allegation merely that defendant owes a balance on the contract is a mere legal conclusion, showing neither of such requisites. [§ 186] 5. Demand. The circumstances under which a demand is or is not a condition precedent to the right to maintain an action of replevin have been stated previously in this title.[93] Where no demand is necessary in order to maintain the action, the complaint need not allege a demand,[94] and a complaint alleging merely a wrongful taking is sufficient.[95] Where, however, a demand is necessary, as where the property came lawfully into defendant's possession, it has ordinarily been held that the complaint must allege a demand,[96] it being insufficient where it is not alleged that the original taking was wrongful, merely to allege a wrongful detention;[97] but on the contrary it has been held that unless the complaint affirmatively shows that defendant came lawfully into possession of the property, it is sufficient to allege a wrongful detention without any allegation of demand.[98] If the allegation of the complaint affirmatively shows that defendant came lawfully into possession of the property, a demand must be alleged.[99]

[§ 187] 6. Damages. Where the complaint demands a return of the property or its value and states the value, an ad damnum clause is not necessary;[1] but damage cannot be recovered unless there is an allegation of damage.[2] A general allegation of damage is, however, sufficient to authorize a recovery of such damages as are the natural and immediate consequence of the wrongful acts of defendant complained of,[3] such as damages for the value of the use of the property while wrongfully detained by defendant,[4] although there is some authority to the contrary;[5] but special damages cannot be recovered unless specially pleaded,[6] such as damages for an injury to the property while in defendant's possession.[7] Where damages are claimed, a failure to allege in terms the nonpayment of damages does not render the complaint bad.[8] Where plaintiff sues for specific property and damages for its detention, it is not necessary that the complaint should be amended in order to authorize a recovery of damages for the value of the property, where it is taken by the officer and subsequently returned to defendant because no bond is given by plaintiff.[9]

Pleading of depreciation in value. Generally the depreciation in value of the property detained is not a damage to be specially pleaded,[10] but there is some authority for the rule that depreciation in value by injury is not a natural consequence arising from the wrongful detention, so that recovery therefor can be allowed under a general allegation of damages.[11]

Pleading of exemplary damages. The facts upon which a claim for exemplary damages are based must as a rule be specially pleaded,[12] although it has been held that if outrage or oppression attended the wrongful taking, such facts need not be pleaded.[13]

[§ 188] B. Plea or Answer—1. [a] Plea or answer held sufficient: (1) Defenses. Commercial Credit Co. v. Stanley, 164 Ark. 473, 262 SW 318 (answer alleging defendant's mechanic's lien for repairs, although a conditional sales contract held by plaintiff antedated it, tenders an issue whether plaintiff authorized the repairs, constitutes a defense); Jones v. Keeby, 159 Ark. 586, 252 SW 591 (an answer, in an action to recover a ring alleged to be unlawfully detained and concealed, alleging that defendant purchased the ring for his wife and that she had left him and that he was unable to obtain the ring, and not denying plaintiff's title thereto); McFadden v. Fritz, 90 Ind. 590 (answer averring void title, and setting out the facts constituting fraud); Barnes v. Tannehill, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 604 (plea that defendant took possession of horse as an estray, etc.); Heckela v. Coos defendant relies and not matters of evidence,[21] or legal conclusions,[22] and it need not negative matters of defense to the matter alleged.[23] Unnecessary allegations may be treated as surplusage,[24] and may be stricken out,[25] and a plea which is merely frivolous or impertinent may be disregarded or stricken out on motion.[26] The form and effect of the common-law pleadings in replevin have been considerably modified by the statutes.[27]

Negative pregnant. A denial that defendant took "and" carried away the property is a negative pregnant, and therefore bad;[28] and where plaintiff claims under a chattel mortgage, a denial that he is entitled to possession by virtue of any chattel mortgage executed, acknowledged, or delivered by the owner is a negative pregnant.[29]

Damages. Special damages resulting from plaintiff's seizure of the property must be specially alleged in order for defendant to recover them,[30] and where the right to claim damages depends upon a wrongful seizure by plaintiff, the answer must deny plaintiff's right to possession.[31]

Counterclaim in an answer may be stricken out when not permitted in replevin.[32]

Judgment on pleadings cannot be rendered for plaintiff where the answer raises a material issue,[33] although one denial of the answer may be defective, if there is another which puts in issue a material allegation of the complaint, it is error to render judgment on the pleadings.[34]

[§ 189] 2. General Issues and General Denials. At common law the general issue was non cepit,[35] which disavows all connection with and claim to the property,[36] admits that the property is in plaintiff,[37] and the capacity of plaintiff to sue,[38] and puts in Johannas, 41 Wis. 616 (a denial that the property ever came into defendant's possession at any time). (2) As a plea in abatément. Rauber v. Whitney, 125 Ind. 216, 25 NE 186.

A.) 284 P 673 (allegations justifying detention under contract to purchase on which defendant defaulted); Martz v. Putnam, 117 Ind. 392, 20 NE 270 (an answer failing to negative any allegations in the complaint, but merely attacking the jurisdiction of the court): Roberts v. White, 146 Mass. 256, 15 NE 568 (answer setting up equitable defense); E. R. Darlington Lumber Co. v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 216 Mo. 658, 116 SW 530 (in replevin against a carrier for freight which it refused to deliver on tender of demurrage, the carrier, in the absence of statute fixing demurrage, should allege that the amount tendered was not reasonable, or, if it relied upon any federal regulation fixing demurrage charges, should allege such regulation, and that the amount tendered was insufficient thereunder); Miller v. Warden, 111 Pa. 300, 2 A 90. (2) As plea in abatement. Bent v. Bent, 43 Vt. 42 (plea that no bond was taken). (3) As plea to jurisdiction. Allen v. St. Louis, etc., R. Co., 38 Mo. [a] Under the statutory system of pleading the plea of non cepit does not admit the property to be in plaintiff where the plea is accompanied by a brief statement denying that fact. Manufacturers' Finance Trust v. Stone, 251 Ill. A. 414; Cooper v. Bakeman, 32 Me. 192; Dillingham v. Smith, 30 Me. 370.

issue only the question of the wrongful taking.[39] As the statutes have enlarged the action to include a wrongful detention[40] where the action is brought for such detention, the general issue is non detinet,[41] which has been held to be the only proper plea,[42] and which admits the wrongful taking if a wrongful taking as well as a wrongful detention is alleged,[43] and also admits that the property is in plaintiff;[44] and in such a case the plea of non cepit is improper,[45] as it tenders an immaterial issue.[46] Where the action is for a wrongful taking non detinet is not a proper plea,[47] but if both a wrongful taking and a wrongful detention are alleged the answer should traverse the taking as well as the detention.[48] Under some statutes the general issue is not guilty,[49] and this is a proper answer,[50] and in some jurisdictions it is held that "not guilty" is the only plea allowable.[51] Under the codes defendant may in a proper case plead the general denial,[52] thereby putting in issue every material allegation of plaintiff.[53] An answer denying generally and specifically each and every allegation of a complaint except that of possession by defendant is in effect a general denial.[54] An affirmative answer is unnecessary after a general denial.[55] Where several defendants are sued for a wrongful detention, each may plead non detinet separately.[56]

[§ 190] 3. Denial of Plaintiff's Title.[57] While plaintiff's ownership of the property may be put in issue by a general denial,[58] a plea or answer specially denying plaintiff's ownership of the property is not demurrable as failing to state facts sufficient to constitute a defense.[59] This denial must, however, be in such form as to put in issue the allegations as to plaintiff's ownership or right to possession in the complaint,[60] and the plea or answer should allege who is the owner of the property, otherwise it will be insufficient.[61]

[§ 191] 4. Title in Defendant or Third Person. In an action of replevin a plea of property in defendant or in some third person is a good plea in bar;[62] or in abatement,[63] and a plea and not an

[a] Nature of plea.—(1) A plea of property in defendant or a stranger is not in confession or avoidance of the action, and does not admit the allegation of the complaint that plaintiff is the owner of the property, but on the contrary denies it. It is in the nature of a special traverse and states by way of inducement that the property belongs to a stranger or defendant and traverses the ownership of plaintiff, which throws the burden of proof upon plaintiff and entitles him to open and close the case to the jury. Gentry v. Bargis, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 261. (2) Where the answer alleged facts entitling defendant to a lien, it did not amount to an admission of plaintiff's ownership and right of possession since a plea of property in the defendant is not a plea in confession and avoidance. Welker v. Appleman, 44 Ind. A. 699, 90 NE 35.

[b] The short plea of property in defendant can be understood only as a claim of the entire property in the thing, and will not justify proof of property in defendant and another. McIlvaine v. Holland, 5 Del. 10.

[c] By affirmative answer defendant may plead superior title and right of possession or plaintiff's lack thereof. Munson v. Baldwin, 88 Wash. 379, 153 P 338.

[d] Although defendant's ownership is not alleged in express terms, a judgment in his favor cannot be reversed on that ground when no previous objection on that ground was made, and the answer denied plaintiff's ownership and demanded a return of the property and the other allegations clearly showed that defendant claimed to own the property. McIntire v. Eastman, 76 Iowa 455, 41 NW 162.

63. Boston Type, etc., Fdy. v. Spooner, 5 Vt. 93; Presgrave v. Saunders, 1 Salk. 5, 91 Reprint 5.

avowry is the proper means of alleging such a claim,[64] but defendant should in the same plea traverse plaintiff's allegation of ownership or right of property,[65] which traverse raises the material issue to be tried,[66] and should aver property in himself;[67] the averment of property being by way of inducement,[68] and not traversable.[69] Such plea closes the issue as to plaintiff's right and does not require a reply,[70] and it also admits the taking and detention of the property.[71] Special interest in defendant must be specially pleaded.[72] A plea of property in another should state whether it is in defendant or a third person,[73] and if in a third person such person should be named;[74] but where defendant denies plaintiff's title and claims title in himself, he need not set out the source of his title.[75] Where property in a third person is a good defense without defendant connecting himself therewith,[76] a plea of title in a third person need not contain allegations showing the connection between defendant and the title pleaded.[77] A plea of property in a stranger and in plaintiff is a good plea, in bar or in abatement.[78] A plea of property in defendant is improper where he has merely seized the property for nonpayment of rent.[79]

Demurrer to answer setting up a lien does not admit such a lien.[80]

[§ 192] 5. Taking or Detention under Process. While there is some conflict of authority as to whether in an action against a public officer justification under execution, attachment, or other process must be specially pleaded or may be shown under the general issue,[81] if such a plea is filed it must, in order to be sufficient, set forth facts which if proved will constitute a good defense to the action.[82] Where the property is taken upon execution, the answer must allege the rendition of a judgment against the execution defendant,[83] and that the execution was issued thereon,[84] and was in full force and unsatisfied at the time of the levy,[85] and that the property was taken in pursuance of its authority.[86] The answer must also show that defendant was an officer,[87] and that the process was issued by competent authority,[88] and it must describe such process with sufficient certainty and particularity to show its na-

[a] Allegations held sufficient.—Lammers v. Meyer, 59 Ill. 214 (plea that defendant took property under an execution).

[b] Allegations held insufficient.—Belden v. Laing, 8 Mich. 500 (pendency of prior replevin under which property was held by one of defendants who was sheriff).

[c] Nature of plea.—A pleading by defendant in replevin admitting the taking and justifying under legal process, and praying for a restitution of the property replevied, is in confession and avoidance, and every material allegation therein is deemed under the practice act to be controverted by plaintiff. Stringer v. Davis, 35 Cal. 25.

[d] Swearing of deputy.—In replevin against a county treasurer and his deputy who plead justification under a seizure for the payment of taxes, it is not necessary for the answer to allege that the deputy who made the seizure had been sworn as such. Noland v. Busby, 28 Ind. 154.

[e] Where property is taken on attachment, a plea of justification by the officer is insufficient if it fails to allege that the affidavit was made and annexed to the writ as required by statute and without which the latter could not be executed. McCarty v. Gage, 3 Wis. 404.

[f] In pleading a warrant of distress as justification for taking property, an officer is not bound to aver that the land for which rent was due was situated in the county. Asbell v. Tipton, 1 B. Mon. (Ky.) 300.

[g] Plea in abatement.—Where defendant in an action of replevin brought in a circuit court files a plea in abatement alleging that he took the property as town marshal of the city of Grand Rapids, under a warrant for the collection of a street assessment, he need not allege that the assessment was valid in order to show that the superior court of the city of Grand Rapids has exclusive jurisdiction of the action, under Howell St. Annot. § 6576, providing that such superior court shall have exclusive jurisdiction of all civil actions against the city or any of its officers. Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Nester, 63 Mich. 657, 30 NW 315.

ture,[89] and to show whether it was against the person or property of the execution defendant;[90] it has been held, however, that it is not necessary that the execution or other process under which defendant justifies or a copy thereof should be filed with the answer.[91] So it is held that the answer must also allege that the property belonged to the defendant in the process,[92] and was taken as his property,[93] and that it was subject to be so taken,[94] and in addition to these allegations, it should traverse plaintiff's allegation of ownership.[95] If, however, a plea, although insufficient as a plea of justification by reason of the omission of necessary allegations, alleges that the property belonged to a third person and was not the property of plaintiff, it is good as a plea of property in a stranger, and the other allegations may be treated as surplusage.[96] The plea of justification under attachment need not aver a return,[97] although the contrary has been held.[98]

[§ 193] 6. Pleading Different Defenses—a. In General. As in civil actions generally,[99] defendant in replevin may plead more than one plea,[1] he being entitled to plead as many several matters as he may deem necessary for his defense,[2] but these separate matters of defense should be distinctly and separately pleaded.[3]

[§ 194] b. Inconsistent Defenses. Under and subject to the rules governing the pleading of inconsistent defenses in civil actions generally,[4] defendant in replevin may plead both non cepit and property in himself or a stranger,[5] or he may plead both an absolute and a qualified ownership of the property,[6] or no demise and no rent in arrear,[7] or he may set up a general denial and a justification in his answer where they are separately pleaded,[8] notwithstanding the latter might be proved under the general denial.[9] If defendant in addition to the general denial pleads separate defenses in which plaintiff's ownership of the property and the fact of its detention by defendant are admitted, the general denial can be considered only as a denial of plaintiff's right to immediate possession and the wrongfulness of the detention by defendant.[10]

[§ 195] 7. Affidavit of Defense. In jurisdictions where an affidavit of defense is required to be filed,[11] the fact that the property sought was not found in the possession of defendant or any third person does not relieve defendant of the necessity of filing an affidavit of defense.[12] The affidavit of defense is not necessary if plaintiff fails to state in his declaration the facts upon which he claims title and right to possession.[13] The sufficiency of such an affidavit in an action of replevin must be determined by the same rules that control in other actions where like affidavits are required.[14] The affidavit must state frankly and fairly the facts that support the claim advanced,[15] and any subject of defense set up must be specifically averred and nothing left to inference.[16] The statutory provisions relative to the time for filing an affidavit of defense must be complied with.[17] Where the affidavit of defense is to be filed within a certain time after filing of plaintiff's statement, it need not be filed until such time after notice is given of the filing of the statement after it is filed.[18] Where defendant gives bond and retains the property, his affidavit of defense must allege that he is the owner of the goods.[19]

The procedure in such case is governed by Replevin Act April 19, 1901 (P. L. p 88; St. § 18965 et seq). There is no provision in the latter act, such as is contained in the Practice Act of 1915, that every allegation of fact in the plaintiff's statement of claim, if not denied specifically or by necessary implication in the affidavit of defense, shall be taken to be admitted. [§ 196] C. Avowry or Cognizance and Plea Thereto—1. Avowry or Cognizance[20]—a. Justifying Distress. At common law, in replevin of property seized under a distress for rent, an avowry[21] or cognizance[22] must show specifically defendant's title to the demised premises.[23] An early English statute[24] was passed to meet the difficulty of knowing who the tenant was, and dispensed with the naming of any person certain as tenant; but it left the necessity for showing specifically the landlord's title, as at common law.[25] To obviate the difficulty of stating specifically the landlord's title a later statute was enacted[26] which made it sufficient for defendants in replevin to avow or make cognizance generally without setting forth the title of the landlord or lessor,[27] and under similar statutes in many jurisdictions in the United States,[28] a general avowry without setting out title is sufficient;[29] although it must show all the essential facts giving the right realized by him, and that at the time of the receipt of the notes and check plaintiff was indebted to him in an amount greatly in excess of the certificates, notes, and check); North v. August Gately, etc., Storage Co., 56 Pa. Super. 267 (in replevin against a husband to recover a piano, an affidavit of defense alleging title in the wife is sufficient); Moore v. Newswanger, 11 Pa. Dist. & Co. 49 (affidavit denying plaintiff's allegation that defendant was a partnership, and alleging it to be a corporation); Jackson v. Blair, Inc., 9 Pa. Dist. & Co. 17 (affidavit drawn in accordance with Philadelphia C. Pl. Ct. Rules, rule 68); Moser v. Roughton, 5 Pa. Dist. & Co. 520 (as setting up lien for repairs); Carnell v. Gorson, 25 Pa. Dist. 189 (affidavit denying plaintiff's ownership and alleging ownership in defendant, and denying knowledge of an alleged lease of property).

[c] Affidavit held insufficient.—Hale v. Ashland, 260 Pa. 547, 103 A 1018 (in replevin for fire apparatus motors sold to defendant, an affidavit of defense which set up that the contract of purchase was unauthorized, but in no way denied plaintiff's title or right of possession); Carr v. Hughes, 71 Pa. Super. 412 (an affidavit of defense to a declaration in replevin on a bailment lease, which consists of a general denial of the bailor's title and a further averment that the bailment was entered into for the sole purpose of defrauding defendant's creditors, and that the title never was in the bailor or his assignee); Miller v. Jackson, 34 Pa. Super. 31 (affidavit alleging title in defendant, when annexed papers show only a chattel mortgage); Ramsdell v. Seybert, 27 Pa. Super. 133 (affidavit failing to show compliance with statute on sale for distress for rent); Strafford v. Walter, 24 Pa. Super. 498 (affidavit in action for goods seized in distress proceedings); Hinden v. McClain, 10 Pa. Dist. & Co. 563 (affidavit alleging agreement which attempts to change a written contract by parol); Driscoll v. Waite, 6 Pa. Dist. & Co. 417 (affidavit alleging purchase of lost dog, and lien for its support); Albright v. Lenhart, 2 Pa. Dist. & Co. 21 (as not showing gift inter vivos or donatio causa mortis); Eisele v. Lambert, 1 Pa. Dist. & Co. 26 (affidavit admitting possession, but not denying plaintiff's claims); Patch Mfg. Co. v. Killinger, 26 Pa. Co. 539, 15 YorkLegRec 174 (affidavit alleging set-off).

[d] Supplemental affidavit of defense is sufficient, where it avers that, after defendant had received the certificate from plaintiff, plaintiff sold shares of stock in the same company to third persons, and that it was mutually agreed that defendant should hold the certificate and have it divided, so as to give to such third persons the number of shares they had purchased, and that this had been prevented by plaintiff's refusing to permit the reissue of certificates to the parties entitled to the stock and notifying the company not to transfer the certificates. [a] Reënactment of statute.—(1) The statute of 11 Geo. II has been reënacted in New York (Hill v. Stocking, 6 Hill 277); (2) and in Pennsylvania (Barr v. Hughes, 44 Pa. 516) (3) while in Indiana, although the statute has not been reënacted, a similar statute is in force (Wright v. Mathews, 2 Blackf. 187).

[c] In Vermont it is not necessary for defendant to set forth his title in the avowry. It is enough to state that he was the owner or lawful occupant of the close. That rule in the old English cases only applies to cases of distress for rent, where the landlord who distrained was out of possession and whose right to claim rent and make distress therefor depended wholly on his title. In such cases there was a manifest propriety in requiring him to set out his title. In this state there is no such species of replevin, and there is no propriety in requiring the avowant to set out his title any more than in trespass or ejectment. Gipson v. Bump, 30 Vt. 175.

[d] In Virginia the common-law rules, unaffected by statute, have been held to be in force. Southall v. Garner, 2 Leigh (29 Va.) 372 (defective avowry).

to distrain,[30] and, the existence of a demise at a certain rent mentioned must be averred, as well as enjoyment under it during the time in which the rent accrued, and that such rent remains due,[31] and that the goods were distrained upon the demised premises.[32] But while the rent reserved must be accurately stated, the rent in arrears need not be.[33] Nor need the avowry show that the goods distrained belonged to the tenant.[34] While it is not necessary to set forth the warrant and affidavit in the avowry, a general averment of the distress being sufficient,[35] and the avowry, if defective, cannot be aided by setting forth the distress warrant and affidavit,[36] yet if it sets out a defective affidavit, the avowry is demurrable.[37]

Several avowries may be made by defendant justifying in different rights.[38]

In avowing as executor for a distress for rent, the avowant must show affirmatively that the rent fell due before his testator's death;[39] but it is unnecessary to show the title of the testator.[40]

Husband and wife. A husband may avow in his own name for rent due in right of his wife.[41]

[a] For example (1) if defendant be seized in his demesne as of fee, it is enough for him to say so generally. Wright v. Williams, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 338. (2) Or, if seized or possessed of an inferior estate, he must show the seizin in fee of the one under whom he claims; and then trace the title to himself particularly, down through its different stages. Wright v. Williams, supra. (3) So if the demise was made by another, he must show the lessor's estate, and trace it particularly down to himself. Wright v. Williams, supra.

[b] Rule applied.—A general avowry which does not set forth the landlord's title is good when the tenant is in the enjoyment of the premises at the time the distress is made, although the rent is payable in advance, and the tenant leaves the premises before the end of the period for which the rent was to be paid. Nichols v. Dusenbury, 2 N. Y. 283.

[c] Rule applicable to distress for ground rent.—Franciscus v. Reigart, 4 Watts (Pa.) 98; McCurdy v. Randolph, 2 PaLJR 323.

[d] If defendant state the lease specially, he must state it truly as to its terms. Taylor v. Moore, 3 Del. 6.

[30] Hill v. Stocking, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 277.

[a] An avowry setting up a distress on parcel of the demised premises must show the facts essential to the landlord's right to distrain with as much certainty as an avowry relating to the whole. Hill v. Stocking, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 277.

[b] An avowant for a distress of cattle of a stranger, for rent, need not show that they were levant et couchant on the demised premises. It is enough to say they were there; and it lies with plaintiff to plead that they were not levant et couchant. Wright v. Williams, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 338.

[c] Avowries and cognizances for distresses damage feasant are not within the statute 11 Geo. II c 19 § 22. They remain therefore as they were at common law, and are regulated by the same principles as avowries for distress for rent before the statute. Wright v. Williams, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 338; Poole v. Longuevill, 2 Saund. 282, 284c note 3, 85 Reprint 1066.

[d] One tenant in common cannot avow alone for taking cattle damage feasant, but he ought also to make cognizance as bailiff of his companion. Culley v. Spearman, 2 H. Bl. 386, 126 Reprint 610.

[e] An avowry bad in part is bad for the whole.—Pemberton v. Van Rensselaer, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 307.

[a] That replevin is brought by a stranger instead of by a tenant does not change the rules relative to avowries. Lavigne v. Russ, 36 Miss. 326 (holding that the same rule applies where goods distrained for rent are replevied by a stranger).

[b] A cognizance by defendant as bailiff, for double rent, under 11 Geo. II c 19 § 18, should show the terms of the tenancy, and of the notice to quit, in order that the tenant's power to determine the tenancy by notice to his landlord, and the sufficiency in law of the notice given, may appear. Humberstone v. Dubois, 10 M. & W. 765, 152 Reprint 681.

[c] Cause of distress.—(1) An avowry in replevin that the taking of the goods was on premises leased for which rent was in arrears is sufficient, although it does not allege that the distress was taken for that rent. Baird v. Porter, 67 Pa. 105; Pullen v. Palmer, Carth. 328, 90 Reprint 792. (2) The word because (quia) in the avowry sufficiently shows the cause of the distress, although the taking is not expressly avowed as for and in the name of a distress for the rent due and in arrear. Baird v. Porter, 67 Pa. 105.

[d] Term for which rent is in arrear.—A cognizance containing the statement that at the time of the taking plaintiff owed for rent in arrear to his landlord for the premises for the years A. D. 1907 and 1908, which rent is still in arrear and unpaid, was demurrable, as not stating certain term for which the tenant is in arrear for rent. McLain v. Willey, 24 Del. 245, 75 A 786.

[e] Rent in kind.—A cognizance stating that defendant took the goods as bailiff, plaintiff being at the time a tenant and owing rent in kind in arrear to the landlord, was demurrable for not stating the nature, quantity, or kind of rent in arrear; it being necessary that the cognizance aver in what crops the rent was to be paid, although the exact value or quantity of the particular crops need not be alleged. McLain v. Willey, 24 Del. 359, 76 A 407.

"It is the demise at 'such a certain rent,' not the amount of rent unpaid, which is the foundation of his claim. It is that alone which is legally essential to his right. The demise of itself shows how much rent is due." Barr v. Hughes, supra.

[b] While the goods were in defendant's possession, there could be no such thing, at common law, as an avowry or cognizance in an action of replevin for a distress for rent. Cassidy v. Elias, 90 Pa. 434 (holding that if defendant claims as owner, that claim is inconsistent with the allegation that the property was seized as a pledge for rent in arrear, for it is a confession that the goods are owned by the tenant. If, on the other hand, he depends on his own right to distrain, he can have no standing unless he has surrendered the property in obedience to the command of the writ); Baird v. Porter, 67 Pa. 105.

Property in defendant cannot be urged as a defense by means of an avowry.[42]

[§ 197] b. Justifying Taking under Execution. An avowry justifying taking property under fieri facias must aver that it was the property of defendant in execution and subject to execution.[43]

[§ 198] 2. Plea—a. Requisites and Sufficiency. A plea in bar to an avowry must be sufficiently certain and specific to demonstrate the insufficiency of the allegations therein.[44] A plea to an avowry is bad if it does not answer all that it professes to answer,[45] or if it tenders an immaterial issue,[46] or where it combines with it a demurrer to the same matter.[47] Plaintiff in replevin may plead several pleas to the avowry or cognizance of defendant;[48] but it seems that a plea which attempts to answer two distinct avowries is bad, although it alleges that the premises and the rent mentioned in both avowries are the same.[49] It has been held that a plea to an avowry or cognizance need not allege any place of taking, but that it is sufficient if it refers to the property mentioned in the declaration and avowry.[50] If plaintiff means to make the place material, he must, in his plea in bar or replication to the avowry, traverse the taking in the place alleged in the avowry, and take issue thereon.[51]

[§ 199] b. Particular Pleas. To an avowry in case of distress for rent, plaintiff in replevin may plead no rent in arrear,[52] such a plea being quasi a general issue;[53] or non tenure,[54] or may traverse or deny the title set out in the avowry,[55] or set up new matter in avoidance of the bar interposed by the avowry.[56] Thus plaintiff may plead to defendant's avowry any matter showing an abuse of the distress, or any unlawful or illegal proceedings by defendant, after the taking,[57] as, for example, matter showing defendant to be a trespasser ab initio.[58] So a plea which sets up as an answer to the avowry that the landlord did not have lawful cause to sue out the writ presents an issue which the tenant has a right to propound.[59] But plaintiff cannot plead nil habuit in tenementis;[60] and the plea de injuria sua propria, etc., to an avowry or cognizance, has been held bad upon special demurrer,[61] except where the avowry consists of matter of excuse only.[62] The pendency of an attachment execution must be pleaded in abatement and not in bar.[63] A plea of tender, to an avowry or cognizance, need not say tout temps prist; nor make a profert of the money in court.[64] Where defendant is an officer holding process, if he justifies or avows under that process, the taking of the goods of plaintiff in replevin, plaintiff in such case may deny the writ by nul tiel record, or he may traverse the matter of mere fact alleged in the plea or avowry;[65] but if the process is against a third person not plaintiff, the denial of property becomes the material allegation, and plaintiff will not be permitted to pass by this traverse and deny the matters in the introductory part of the plea, although set out in the form of avowry.[66] A plea that before the taking under a distress the property was seized under a writ of replevin which did not allege delivery of the necessary affidavit and bond to the officer seizing the property is bad.[67]

[b] Plea held insufficient.—A plea alleging that defendant has parted with all his interest in the premises, but not stating that his interest was an estate for years, is bad on demurrer; for a lessor with an estate in fee may grant it absolutely, and yet retain the right of distress. Manuel v. Reath, 5 Phila. (Pa.) 11.

[45] Nichols v. Dusenbury, 2 N. Y. 283 (holding that where a defendant in replevin avowed the taking of the goods as a distress for a quarter's rent payable in advance, and the plea thereto, professing to be a complete answer, showed that the lessee occupied the premises for a part of the quarter and then abandoned the premises as untenantable in consequence of the landlord not finishing or repairing them according to his agreement, the plea was bad).

(2) A plea to an avowry of distress made for rent, "that when the distress was made, the relation of landlord and tenant had ceased, the landlord was in possession and the goods were not on the demised premises" is not good. [§ 200] D. Subsequent Pleadings—1. Replication or Reply—a. Necessity. In replevin a general denial closes the issues and a reply is unnecessary.[68] But defendant may, if he so elect, plead the specific facts constituting his defense, and if new matter is pleaded in the answer requiring a reply, such reply must be filed,[69] or the new matter will, for the purposes of the trial, be taken as true.[70] So it is held in some jurisdictions that an answer of property in a third person, or in defendant, in effect denies the property or ownership of plaintiff, and is a good plea in bar, and completes the issue without the necessity of a reply.[71] But where defendant pleads property in himself or in others and also by special traverse denies that the property belongs to plaintiff in manner and form, etc., plaintiff should reply by taking issue on the traverse and reaffirming the property to be in himself in mode and form.[72] If permitted by statute, plaintiff may reply double in an action of replevin.[73] Under the codes in some states, requiring a reply only when a counterclaim is pleaded,[74] no reply is necessary to a plea or answer alleging fraud[75] or partnership,[76] or justification under process.[77]

[§ 201] b. Requisites and Sufficiency. The rules relating to the requisites and sufficiency of replications or replies generally[78] are applicable to such pleadings in actions of replevin.[79] Where a reply is necessary, plaintiff may allege therein any new matter not inconsistent with the complaint which constitutes a defense to new matter in the answer;[80] but a reply asserting a new and distinct cause of

[a] Additional averments in the answer that defendant is entitled to the possession of the property because he is the owner thereof, and for the further reason that the property had been delivered to him by an officer who seized it in another replevin action between the same parties, does not enlarge the issues, nor make a reply to the answer necessary. Street v. Morgan, 64 Kan. 85, 67 P 448.

[b] Answer held general denial.—An answer setting forth that the property in controversy is the property of a third person, and that defendant as sheriff has levied an attachment on it, and holds it as the property of said third person, is in effect only a general denial, and needs no reply. [a] Allegations not requiring reply.—An allegation that defendant "is rightfully entitled to the property and to the possession thereof," following a denial of all the averments in plaintiff's petition, is cumulative of these denials, and not new matter requiring a denial. Simonton, 75 Or. 422, 146 P 520 (reply consistent with complaint, and showing absolute title in plaintiff at commencement of the action). (2) On demurrer. Lowry v. Kinsey, 26 Ill. A. 309 (as to a plea of justification). (3) A replication alleging that property was subject to lien of chattel mortgage at time of levy and that plaintiff was holder of mortgage notes is not obnoxious to general demurrer because it did not allege that mortgagor was owner of property at date of mortgage. Bailey v. Sullivan, 75 Colo. 346, 225 P 830. (4) Replication to plea to avowry. Burn v. Bletcher, 23 U. C. Q. B. 28; Shaw v. Shaw, 21 U. C. Q. B. 432. (5) Where defendant filed a special traverse, alleging the ownership of the chattels in a stranger, and averring that the property was not in plaintiff, a replication averring that the property was at the time of the taking in plaintiff as alleged in the declaration was proper. Beatty v. Parsons, 25 Del. 134, 78 A 302.

[b] Replication held insufficient.—Dixon v. Thatcher, 14 Ark. 141 (holding that when defendant, in an action of replevin, pleads property in himself, he avoids the injustice of the taking; and plaintiff in his replication must set forth such facts as will give him the right of dominion and control, even against him who has the legal title); Hoke v. action is improper.[81] If a counterclaim may be set up in a reply, it can be only to defeat a recovery on a counterclaim in the answer, and not for an affirmative judgment on it.[82] There can be no counterclaim or set-off to a mere defense.[83] A replication or reply must answer the whole plea,[84] and should not tender a collateral issue, or it will be demurrable.[85] A general averment of fraud in a replication in replevin is sufficient, it being unnecessary to give the history and details of the fraud.[86]

[§ 202] 2. Rejoinder. Rejoinders in replevin are governed by the rules applicable in civil actions generally.[87] Where the defense to an action of replevin was ownership of land from which the property was taken, and plaintiff's reply alleged adverse possession of said land, it has been held unnecessary that defendant by rejoinder deny the adverse possession.[88]

[§ 203] E. Amended and Supplemental Pleadings—1. Amended Pleadings—a. In General. Under and subject to the rules of amendment of pleadings in civil actions generally[89] the right to amend is as liberally accorded in replevin actions as in other causes.[90] Thus plaintiff may amend his declaration, petition, or complaint so as to include therein certain articles omitted,[91] or to exclude a portion of the property originally claimed,[92] and may amend a complaint defective in not alleging any interest in plaintiff,[93] or so as to change his allegations of ownership from absolute or general to special[94] or vice versa;[95] or to tender the issue of right to possession as administrator of the owner,[96] or to show plaintiff's official capacity instead of his individual capacity,[97] or to describe the property with greater particularity,[98] or to omit the claim for damages.[99] Where the cause of action is not thereby changed, the complaint may be amended to conform to the evidence as to the time of the taking,[1] and the value of the property,[2] or so as to set up fraud.[3] Likewise, allegations of value may be changed by amendment so as to allege a value larger than that stated in the affidavit,[4] or smaller,[5] and amendment of excessive allegations of value should be allowed when it can be done without prejudice.[6] Plaintiff generally may not amend so as to set up a new cause of action.[7]

Jackson v. Croom, 155 Ark. 216, 244 SW 40. (4) Amendment stating more fully a wrongful taking without changing the form of action. Button v. Lusk, 10 NYS 582; Willis v. De Witt, 3 S. D. 281, 52 NW 1090. (5) Amendment claiming, in a different capacity, only a part of the property the whole of which was originally claimed in another capacity. King v. Dudley, 113 N. C. 167, 18 SE 110. (6) Where defendant justified under an attachment, an amendment to the replication so as to allege a complete settlement of the suit in which the attachment issued does not set up a new cause of action. Wise v. Jefferis, 51 Fed. 641, 2 CCA 432.

[b] Amendments held improper.—(1) Plaintiff should not be permitted to amend his pleading to embrace a claim for damages where such amendment would make a new cause of action. National SS. Co. v. Sheahan, 122 N. Y. 461, 25 NE 858, 10 LRA 782. (2) Amendment inserting allegations

Where, however, a cause of action in tort may be amended to state a different action ex delicto,[8] a declaration, petition, or complaint in replevin may be amended to one in trover,[9] and it has been held that, where personal service is had and part of the property cannot be found, plaintiff may add a count in trover.[10] If an affidavit which is used as a pleading is defective in respect of the statement of the right of action, it may be amended on motion to quash.[11] Defendant may amend his plea or answer so as to demand a return of the property;[12] or to increase the amount of damages,[13] or to show that plaintiff was represented by counsel in a former attachment suit for the same property and was defeated,[14] or to change the description of an execution relied upon as justification;[15] and where a defective answer is not attacked and is sufficient to inform plaintiff that defendant relies on a general denial, it is proper to permit an amendment properly pleading the general denial.[16] When an amended petition is permitted to be filed, it relates back to the commencement of the action, so that a new action need not be instituted nor a redelivery of the property made, as antecedent to the right to amend.[17]

Statement in justice's court may be amended to state jurisdictional facts where the jurisdiction of the justice attached notwithstanding the defective statement,[18] or so as to introduce, on appeal from a justice of the peace, facts essential to the action.[19]

[§ 204] b. Conditions on Granting Leave To Amend. The terms on which an amendment may be permitted rest ordinarily in the sound discretion of the trial court.[20] Thus it is in the discretion of the court to require the payment of all antecedent costs as a condition precedent to the allowance of the amendment.[21] If the party fails to comply with the conditions, he only forfeits his right to amend, and in such event the pleadings in the case remain precisely in the same condition they were before the leave to amend was granted;[22] and, if such pleadings properly present a case, the court should hear and determine the same on the merits, and it is error for the court to make an order dismissing the case for a failure to comply with the conditions attached to the leave to amend.[23]

[§ 205] c. Time of Amendment. The general rules as to the time for amendments[24] apply in actions of replevin.[25]

[§ 206] 2. Supplemental Pleadings. The granting or refusal of leave to file a supplemental pleading is a matter largely within the discretion of the trial court.[26] As plaintiff must show a present right of recovery upon commencing his action,[27] he cannot file a supplemental complaint to show a right of recovery not arising until after the seizure in replevin of the property.[28] Defendant may file a supplemental answer setting out facts, arising since the action was commenced, which would vary the relief to which plaintiff is entitled.[29]

[§ 207] F. Conclusiveness of Allegations in Pleadings. The rules relative to conclusiveness of allegations in the pleadings in civil actions gener-

Popper v. Seufert, 147 App. Div. 371, 132 NYS 209. (2) An answer admitting certain matters and denying others cannot be amended to deny the matters admitted after the close of plaintiff's evidence proving the facts denied. Butler v. Farley, 1 NYS 849.

[c] After verdict.—(1) Trial courts have discretionary power to permit amendments of pleadings, even after verdict, in furtherance of justice, but such power should be more cautiously exercised after verdict than in cases where the application is made before verdict. Younglove v. Knox, 44 Fla. 743, 33 S 427. (2) Where an amendment after verdict makes a new issue, a new trial ought ordinarily to be granted, unless under very special circumstances. Younglove v. Knox, 44 Fla. 743, 33 S 427. (3) Thus it is error to permit an amendment of a pleading increasing the amount of the recovery prayed, to conform to the verdict, without setting aside the verdict and granting a new trial on payment of costs. ally[30] apply in actions of replevin.[31] Thus it has been held that allegations of value in a complaint under which plaintiff has secured possession of the property are conclusive on plaintiff.[32] Where the allegation of value in a petition in replevin is regarded as unnecessary or a matter of form,[33] such an allegation is not conclusive on the question of value of the property,[34] but where allegations of value are material,[35] such allegations are held conclusive upon the pleader.[36] Allegations of value in a complaint are not binding upon defendant.[37] Where an action has been pending for several years, allegations in the pleadings as to the value of the property are not conclusive.[38]

[§ 208] G. Defects and Objections—1. Mode of Objection—a. Demurrer. As in civil actions generally[39] defects in pleadings in replevin may be objected to by demurrer.[40] Thus defendant may demur to a declaration, petition, or complaint which is defective in misstating the form of action,[41] or in failing to allege plaintiff's right to possession,[42] or a wrongful taking[43] or detention,[44] or in failing adequately to describe the property,[45] or in not alleging demand, where defendant obtained possession of the property lawfully,[46] or in failing to allege the illegality of a tax after averring the taking for a tax,[47] or in showing affirmatively that title and right to possession are in defendant.[48] An objection that the declaration, petition, or complaint fails to specify the county in which the property is detained should be presented by demurrer.[49] A failure to allege that the property was in the county in which the action was brought cannot be reached by a general demurrer,[50] but a demurrer on that ground should distinctly specify the objection,[51] and a demurrer on the ground that the complaint fails to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action is bad.[52]

Demurrer to writ. In a jurisdiction in which the writ and declaration have been blended, an objection that the writ did not particularly describe the place where the chattels were detained should be raised by demurrer,[53] but the writ is not demurrable for failure to describe all the chattels seized,[54] nor for failure to allege their value.[55] A demurrer challenges the writ and declaration, but not the bond.[56]

Demurrer to plea. A general demurrer does not lie to a plea or answer which presents a good defense merely because it also sets up matters which are irrelevant.[57]

General denial. Since, where the code system of pleading prevails, a general denial in replevin puts in issue every fact contained in the complaint necessary to maintain the action, an answer containing a general denial is not as a whole subject to a general demurrer,[58] but when pleaded plaintiff may demur to a further answer setting up facts which may be proved under the general denial.[59]

On demurrer to amended petition, the original declaration, not having been made a part thereof, cannot be considered.[60]

Judgment on demurrer. Subject to the rules applicable in civil actions generally,[61] final judgment may be entered upon sustaining or overruling a demurrer.[62]

Fergusson v. Comfort, 194 Mo. A. 423, 184 SW 1192. (2) A statute providing that if plaintiff fails to prosecute his suit diligently the jury shall assess the value of the property, contemplates that plaintiff's statement as to value shall not be conclusive where evidence of value is produced. Fergusson v. Comfort, 194 Mo. A. 423, 184 SW 1192.

(2) Since the value of property sought to be replevined at the time of trial often varies from its value at the time of commencing the action, and since the material value is that on the date of trial, a statement in the complaint or affidavit of the value at any other time is immaterial and not binding upon the pleader, who should be permitted to show valuation at the time of trial notwithstanding such pleading. [§ 209] b. Motions. A motion to make more definite, rather than a demurrer, is the proper mode of objecting to a petition to replevy money.[63] Where the complaint does not state the itemized value of the articles sued for, defendant may, by motion to make more definite and certain, require such statement.[64] A motion to dismiss on the ground of failure to state a cause of action cannot be made to serve the purpose of a demurrer.[65] An answer alleging a lien in defendant, but not alleging the date of accrual, can be objected to only by motion to make more specific, and not by demurrer.[66] Where defendant has pleaded the general denial,[67] the court may, upon motion, strike out a special answer setting up property in defendant,[68] or a lien on the goods sued for,[69] or title in a third person,[70] or any affirmative defenses,[71] as under the general denial anything controverting plaintiff's cause of action might be proved.[72] A plea in abatement, and not a motion to quash, is the proper objection to a variance between the writ and declaration.[73]

[§ 210] 2. Waiver of Objections. As objections in civil actions generally may be waived by pleading over or going to trial without objection,[74] so in replevin defendant may, by pleading over[75] or by filing a redelivery bond,[76] waive an objection to a complaint demurrable for a defective description of the property sought. An objection to a complaint for failure to allege a wrongful detention is waived by failure to object in the trial court at the proper time.[77] An objection that the petition fails to set out or contain a copy of a chattel mortgage under which plaintiff claims a right to possession, which could have been urged by demurrer, is waived by answer.[78] An objection that a count in a declaration is defective for merely referring to another count instead of describing the property is waived by pleading over, and after verdict.[79] An objection to a plea of property in a third person which does not set out his title specially comes too late after verdict.[80] A demurrer to a complaint for not alleging where the property is detained as well as where it was taken being overruled is waived by answering over,[81] and so a demurrer to a plea is waived by going to trial on issues of fact.[82] If plaintiff fails to file and serve his complaint within the time limited by statute, an exception duly taken to a refusal of the court to dismiss upon this ground is not waived by pleading and going to trial.[83] A complaint being defective because showing upon its face that plaintiff did not have exclusive right to possession, such defect is not waived by failure to object to a defect of parties.[84]

[§ 211] 3. Cure or Aider of Defects—a. In General. The rules applicable to the curing or aider of defects in pleadings in civil actions generally[85] apply to pleadings in actions of replevin.[86] A paragraph of a complaint which is defective in not sufficiently describing the property cannot be aided by reference to another paragraph.[87] While an allegation of venue is generally necessary[88] failure to allege venue in the complaint may be disregarded as a defect when the sheriff's return shows that the property was found and taken by him within the jurisdiction of the court.[89]

Reference to affidavit. Except where the affidavit may be used as a complaint or petition,[90] the affidavit is no part of the pleadings,[91] and a petition, declaration, or complaint, which omits material averments, cannot be aided or supplemented by referring to an affidavit containing the necessary allegations,[92] so that failure to allege a wrongful detention in the complaint is a fatal defect not cured by such an allegation in the affidavit,[93] nor can the affidavit be referred to or otherwise used to supply the necessary allegations of right to possession,[94] or essential allegations of jurisdiction.[95] court to render a judgment against plaintiff for double the amount of rent in arrears, to be ascertained by a jury of inquiry. Towns v. Boarman, 23 Miss. 186.

[b] Overruling demurrer to plea.—Where a plea in replevin presents a complete bar to the action, and the demurrer thereto is overruled, without issue being taken thereon, the court should render final judgment against plaintiff. Kimball v. Citizens' Sav. Bank, 3 Ill. A. 320 (holding that in such case it is error merely to render judgment for costs).

[c] Demurrer to petition, and leave to amend.—Where plaintiff gave a return bond and received the property sued for, and the court sustained a demurrer to the petition, and gave judgment for costs against plaintiff, no assessment of the value of the property, or damages for its detention being made, nor a return of the property awarded, and afterward, at the same term, granted plaintiff leave to amend his petition, it was held that this impliedly set aside the judgment for costs and reinstated the cause. Aider by proof. An answer defective as a justification of the taking and detention under legal process may be aided by the proof.[96]

Pleading of adverse party. An omission of an allegation of venue is cured by defendant's pleading over.[97] A variance between the writ and declaration in describing the property is cured by pleading over.[98] A complaint defective on special demurrer for alleging ownership as on and after a certain date instead of specifically alleging ownership at the time of commencement of the action is sufficient where defendant answers over without demurring.[99] It has been held that an allegation in the answer denying plaintiff's ownership will not cure the omission of an allegation of ownership in the complaint,[1] although it has also been held that a failure of the complaint to allege plaintiff's interest in the property is cured by an answer wherein the nature of his right is asserted.[2] A defect in a complaint, consisting of failure to directly aver title and right to possession at the commencement of the action, is cured by a denial in an answer of plaintiff's ownership at that or any other time.[3] A plea defective in not traversing plaintiff's right of property may be cured by a replication of right of property.[4] Failure of a cognizance justifying under a fieri facias to state the amount of the demand is cured by plaintiff's joining issue.[5]

[§ 212] b. Aider by Verdict or Judgment.[6] As in civil actions generally,[7] many defects in pleadings in replevin are cured by verdict.[8] Thus the failure of a declaration, petition, or complaint to allege a wrongful taking,[9] or demand and refusal,[10] or the value of the property,[11] or the place of taking and locating,[12] or that the property was detained in the county where the suit is brought,[13] or to negative a taking under legal process[14] is cured by verdict. In an action for wrongful detention a defect, which consists of a failure to allege that the property which was delivered by plaintiff to defendant was to be redelivered upon request, is cured by verdict.[15] An allegation that plaintiff was owner and entitled to possession at the time the action was commenced is, where the evidence shows that the ownership was the sole issue in the action, sufficient after verdict.[16] A complaint which does not generally allege plaintiff's ownership and right to possession but does specially plead plaintiff's title and the specific facts to which the court will look in determining plaintiff's right to recover is good as against a motion to vacate a judgment.[17] But as a declaration or complaint which entirely fails to state a cause of action cannot be aided by verdict,[18] failure to allege a wrongful detention or such facts from which a wrongful detention may be inferred is such a defect which is not aided by verdict.[19] So a description so defective that identification is impossible is not aided.[20]

Plea of justification under an attachment, if defective for failing to allege a debt due, is cured by verdict.[21]

Avowries. In some jurisdictions it has been held that failure of an avowry to allege the title of defendant, where such allegation is necessary, being a case of defective title, and not of a title defectively set forth, the defect is not cured by verdict.[22] And where the avowry is defective in failing to show the legal issue of the distress warrant, it has been held proper to arrest the judgment,[23] but defendant cannot have arrest of judgment for a mistaken date in his own avowry.[24] An omission to join issue on an avowry for rent in arrear, or otherwise to notice it on the record, is a mere irregularity, and is cured by verdict of "no rent due."[25] An avowry of the taking has been held to cure a defective description after verdict.[26]

[§ 213] H. Issues, Proof, and Variance—1. Issues Raised and Matters To Be Proved—a. In General. As in civil actions generally,[27] the issues are confined to those raised by the pleadings.[28] Matters properly pleaded by one party and not denied by the other are deemed to be admitted and need not be proved;[29] but in some instances matters alleged by way of inducement must necessarily be proved.[30] As in other civil actions,[31] the general denial puts in issue and requires proof of every material averment of plaintiff's statement of his cause of action;[32] but only such matters as plaintiff need prove are put in issue by a general denial.[33] A general denial qualified by an admission of possession of the property by defendant puts in issue everything, except plaintiff's allegation that defendant is in possession of such property.[34] A plea of not guilty, where such is authorized or required, puts in issue every material fact.[35]

[§ 214] b. Title and Right to Possession. Plaintiff's title, and right to possession are put in issue and require proof where defendant pleads a general denial,[36] or not guilty,[37] property in himself,[38] or in a third person;[39] but not where he pleads non cepit,[40] except where such plea is accompanied by a brief statement of property in defendant.[41] Plaintiff's title and right to possession are put in issue by a plea of non detinet,[42] although there is some authority to the contrary.[43] It has been held that a general denial puts in issue only plaintiff's right to possession.[44] A special plea of property in defendant does not raise the issue of absolute ownership.[45] Where plaintiff claims under a special ownership, he must prove the facts pleaded as constituting such ownership.[46] To put special ownership in issue, defendant must deny specially the allegations of fact upon which such special ownership is based.[47] Ownership is not put in issue by an answer or affidavit of defense which does not deny it.[48] Plaintiff's tenure is not in issue where plaintiff replies no rent in arrear to an avowry.[49] Title to realty may become an issue, where the right to possession of the chattels in question depends upon it;[50] but the question whether the chattels are so annexed to the freehold as not to be the subject of replevin is not raised or put in issue by a plea of property.[51]

[§ 215] c. Taking, Detention, and Possession by Defendant. A plea of non cepit puts in issue the wrongful taking by defendant,[52] but plaintiff need prove a wrongful taking only when a plea of this nature is interposed.[53] A wrongful detention of the property is a material fact to be proved by plaintiff,[54] and is put in issue by a plea of non detinet,[55] and it has been held that such a plea puts in issue only the detention.[56] A general denial puts in issue the wrongful detention.[57] So also does a plea of not guilty, in such jurisdictions as permit or require this plea.[58] The unlawful taking or detention of the goods must always be proved when put in issue by a proper plea;[59] but when detention is proved this is sufficient, although there is an additional allegation of unlawful taking.[60] Under an issue of no rent in arrear defendant need not prove that the distress was laid by himself or by his authority.[61] A plea of not guilty puts in issue defendant's possession of the property,[62] and plaintiff must prove such possession,[63] even where the answer admits the taking, but denies defendant's possession at the time the action was commenced.[64] If defendant pleads purchase in good faith, he must prove the legal right of his vendor to sell.[65] Under the statutes of some jurisdictions plaintiff must prove that the property in controversy was not taken for a tax, assessment, or by virtue of process;[66] but in other jurisdictions an allegation of that fact, when required to be made in the affidavit or complaint, is considered as a mere negative averment to be proved by defendant.[67]

[§ 216] d. Demand.[68] Where the action is brought for a wrongful detention without an unlawful taking, a demand must be alleged and proved.[69] The making of a demand by plaintiff prior to the commencement of the suit for the return of the property is not in issue and need not be proved where defendant, either in his pleading or his evidence, asserts ownership or right to possession in himself and demands a return of the property,[70] or where plaintiff's allegation of a demand having been made is not denied.[71] Proof of demand is necessary where defendant pleads the general issue with a statement that he retains possession by the terms of a mortgage to plaintiff and with plaintiff's permission.[72] In some jurisdictions the statutes require defendant to plead the fact that no demand was made if he wishes to raise that issue.[73]

[§ 217] e. Identity and Location of Property. It is incumbent upon plaintiff to prove that the property which he claims is identical with that to which he is entitled.[74] Where the declaration describes the property in unnecessarily minute details, plaintiff need not prove more than enough to identify the property with reasonable certainty.[75] Likewise, where defendant asserts a claim to the property in controversy under a mortgage, he must, in order to sustain his claim, prove that the property mortgaged is the same as that sought to be recovered.[76] The plea of non cepit puts in issue the place where the goods were taken,[77] and so also does a plea of cepit in alio loco.[78] In at least one jurisdiction plaintiff need not prove the detention of the property in any particular county, although an allegation of that fact must be made in the affidavit.[79]

[§ 218] f. Value of Property and Damages. Proof of the value of the property is required, although the allegation thereof in the complaint is not denied;[80] but it has been held that the value of each article need not be proved, provided there is proof of the total value.[81] A general denial puts in issue allegations of value[82] and damages.[83] Allegations of damage must be proved, when damages are sought.[84] Damages for unlawful detention must be proved.[85]

[§ 219] g. Justification by Seizure under Process. An officer who, attempting to justify his possession, bases his right to possession on an execution attachment or other process must prove that at the time of the seizure he was an officer,[86] must show the proceedings and process under which he acted and claims possession,[87] and that the process was not only regular on its face but that it was issued by competent authority.[88] Where the property is taken under an execution, defendant must prove that he acted under a valid judgment[89] which has not been satisfied,[90] and that the property seized is the property of the execution debtor;[91] but it has been held that defendant need not prove the judgment where he proves an execution regular on its face and appearing to have been issued by a court having jurisdiction,[92] or where plaintiff introduces the execution and claims exemption against the levy.[93] Where defendant bases his right upon a seizure under a writ of attachment, he must prove not only the existence of the writ, but also that the attachment defendant was indebted to the attachment plaintiff, and that all the jurisdictional steps were taken before the writ issued;[94] but it has been held not necessary to prove the debt of the attaching creditor, except where the property was taken from possession of plaintiff, a stranger to the attachment.[95]

[§ 220] 2. Evidence Admissible under Pleadings—a. In General. The well-settled principle that evidence which tends to prove or disprove an issue presented by the pleadings should be admitted and that evidence of matters not put in issue by the pleadings should be excluded[96] applies in actions of replevin.[97]

Value. Although there is some authority for the proposition that no evidence of value is admissible unless the allegation of value in the petition is denied in the answer and thereby put in issue,[98] the general rule is that either or both parties may introduce evidence of the true value of the property, regardless of whether plaintiff's allegation in the petition is denied.[99] Upon an issue of use value, evidence of the use value of a different kind of property is inadmissible.[1] Value is immaterial and evidence of it is inadmissible where plaintiff has possession of the property at the time of trial and no damages are claimed.[2]

[§ 221] b. Under Declaration, Petition, or Complaint—(1) Title or Right to Possession. Where plaintiff alleges ownership in himself generally, without setting out the source or nature of his title, he may prove a special property entitling him to possession,[3] but having alleged absolute or sole ownership, he cannot prove a special ownership;[4] and if he has stated the nature and source of his title, he is confined in his proof to his allegations.[5] Where plaintiff must allege facts constituting his owner-

(3) Average increase in weight cattle would have gained upon first-class feed during a certain period was immaterial under the pleadings and issues where plaintiff replevied cattle which he was pasturing in defendant's pasture on the ground that defendant agreed to sow barley to produce further pasturage but did not do so, and also alleged as special damage that, because of the poor pasturage, the cattle were greatly reduced in flesh. (13) Property in third persons. Miller v. Darling, 22 Minn. 303. (14) Status of plaintiff as an insolvent debtor. Basford v. Mills, 6 Md. 385. (15) That plaintiff was not the real party in interest. Woods v. Berry, 7 Mont. 195, 14 P 758. (16) Where allegations in a complaint were put in issue by defendant claiming under a bill of sale, the execution of which plaintiff did not deny, a mistake on the part of plaintiff and fraud on the part of defendant by which the instrument intended to be a chattel mortgage became a bill of sale were not within the issues so as to admit proof thereof. Meyer v. Bigham, 16 Ariz. 212, 141 P 726. (17) Where articles were not in the list sued for, nor in the return as having been taken under the writ, and the answer alleged nothing as to them, they were not within the issues, so as to admit proof that they were taken under the writ. American Clay Mach. Co. v. Sedalia Brick, etc., Co., 174 Mo. A. 485, 160 SW 902. (18) Where the issue raised was confined to the title of the property replevied, evidence relating to the declaration by one of the parties, who was a bailor, with respect to the property, was properly excluded. Hayden v. McMillan, 79 Pa. Super. 1. (19) Where partnership of plaintiff is not an issue, whether plaintiffs were partners and whether one plaintiff had paid the other for his interest therein was immaterial. Coody v. Shawyer, (Tex. Civ. A.) 161 SW 935. (20) Whether shippers of milk bottles had made expenditures in reclaiming the bottles from dumping grounds was immaterial; they not being parties to suit against a railroad to replevy bottles. Kee, etc., Dairy Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 291 Ill. 248, 126 NE 179.

[c] Under a plea of non cepit and property in himself, defendant will not be permitted to show that he was not in possession of the chattels at the date of the writ. McLeod v. Johnson, 96 Me. 271, 52 A 760.

[a] Rule applied.—(1) The buyer of a car of hay could not refuse to pay a sight draft attached to a bill of lading and bring replevin for such carload, alleging absolute ownership thereof by purchase, and detention because of a dispute as to the amount due, and recover by proving as part of the purchase price paid by him an unliquidated claim for damages for poor quality of previous shipments to him for which he had paid defendant. Droge El. Co. v. Jackson, 193 Iowa 949, 185 NW 563. (2) Having alleged his source of title as being under a ship and the extent thereof,[6] a mere allegation of absolute ownership cannot be proved by chattel mortgage.[7] Having alleged absolute ownership, but also having set out mortgages and making it apparent that plaintiff claims under them, the mortgages are admissible.[8] A plaintiff who sues in his own name and as owner cannot introduce evidence showing title in a stranger.[9]

[§ 222] (2) Taking, Detention, and Demand. Under a declaration or complaint alleging either a wrongful taking or a wrongful detention, plaintiff may prove a wrongful taking,[10] a demand and refusal,[11] or any circumstances warranting the inference that demand and refusal would have been unavailing,[12] although it has been held that demand cannot be proved where not alleged.[13] Where no distinction is recognized between replevin for taking and replevin for detention, plaintiff may prove either taking or detention.[14] Plaintiff may introduce evidence of a wrongful and forcible taking even under issues of property.[15]

Place of taking. An argumentative allegation of the place of taking in the declaration, when not demurred to, authorizes the admission of evidence to sustain it.[16] A declaration in the detinet does not estop plaintiff from showing a taking in a county different from that in which the suit is brought.[17]

Taking under process. A claim that property exempt therefrom was taken under execution cannot be proved by plaintiff when by his pleading he has negatived a taking under process.[18]

[§ 223] (3) Value. Where the use value of the property must be specially pleaded,[19] evidence of the use value is inadmissible where it is not so pleaded.[20]

[§ 224] (4) Fraud. Under a general allegation of property, plaintiff may give evidence of facts showing defendant's fraud in obtaining possession of the property.[21] Under allegations in a declaration or complaint negativing the validity of a contract of exchange upon which defendant relies, plaintiff may introduce evidence of fraud of defendant inducing plaintiff to make the contract.[22]

[§ 225] c. Under Plea or Answer—(1) In General—(a) Property in Defendant. Under a general plea of property in defendant any legal title may be proved,[23] and defendant may prove a joint ownership in himself and plaintiff,[24] or a mortgage to himself from the owner of the property.[25] Under a plea of special ownership defendant cannot introduce evidence to show he is absolute owner.[26] A plea of absolute property in defendant does not prevent him from showing a special property in mitigation of damages.[27] Under a specific denial of plaintiff's title or right to possession, defendant may show a right to possession in himself by virtue of a pledge.[28] An answer alleging a lien, without pleading the facts constituting a special lien, is nevertheless sufficient to admit evidence of a special agreement amounting to a pledge.[29] Under a plea of property in defendant, the record of a prior replevin suit is admissible.[30]

Intervener, having pleaded ownership, cannot rely on possession under a lien or pledge.[31]

Damages. An answer which denies plaintiff's ownership, alleges the value of the property, and claims damages for plaintiff's willful, malicious seizure of property is sufficient to admit proof of both actual and punitive damages.[32]

[§ 226] (b) Property in Stranger. Title in a third person may be shown by defendant under a plea setting up such fact,[33] or under a plea or an-

[33] Ingle v. Wallach, 1 Black (U. S.) 96, 17 L. ed. 50; Levy v. Hohweisner, 101 App. Div. 82, 91 NYS 552.

[a] Rule applied.—Where defendants in replevin in the municipal court filed an answer alleging title in a third person, they were entitled to offer evidence thereof, and to call the person so alleged to have title as a witness, irrespective of the fact that the latter had not availed himself of Municipal Court Act, § 115a (L. [1903] p 1016 c 431), authorizing a person not a party to the action, claiming the right to the possession of the chattel, to obtain an order per-swer denying plaintiff's title;[34] and evidence of the manner in which such person acquired title is admissible.[35] A defendant who has pleaded title in a particular third person will not be permitted to show title in another person.[36] Where a plea of property in a third person is merely a matter of inducement to a denial of plaintiff's right of property, testimony to show property in such third person is immaterial.[37] Under an answer denying allegations of ownership in plaintiff on and after a certain date, evidence is inadmissible to show that plaintiff parted with possession prior to that date.[38]

[§ 227] (c) Return of Property. Under a plea of non detinet defendant may show that before suit was brought he returned the goods.[39]

[§ 228] (d) Taking under Process. Where defendant justifies his taking under process, the judgment and proceedings in the suit in which the process issued are admissible,[40] unless the proper foundation therefor has not been laid in the plea or answer,[41] and evidence of a taking by virtue of an execution is admissible.[42] A void writ cannot be introduced in evidence.[43] Where the answer alleges the taking of the property as stolen goods under a warrant of arrest, defendant may testify that he was an officer, that he took the property under the belief that it was stolen, and he detains it by direction of the magistrate.[44] Where defendant justifies under an attachment, proof that the levy was excessive cannot avail plaintiff where he does not allege an excessive levy in his complaint.[45]

Taking from defendant by sheriff under process in another action may be proved by defendants under an answer so alleging, to establish the defense that the property was seized under a right paramount to plaintiff's.[46]

[§ 229] (e) Fraud. Where fraud is specially pleaded by defendant, evidence tending to show fraud is competent,[47] and, while it has been held that fraud must be specially pleaded before evidence of it is admissible,[48] it has been held in most jurisdictions that under denials of ownership and right to possession, defendant may show that the right of plaintiff is based on fraud.[49]

[§ 230] (2) Under General Issue or General Denial—(a) In General. In accordance with the general rule,[50] it has been held that, in an action of replevin, a general denial puts in issue all the material allegations in the complaint, and that under it defendant may give in evidence any matter that tends to contradict and defeat plaintiff's claim.[51]

Evidence of special damage is inadmissible un-

[a] Evidence of estoppel is admissible under a general denial. Towne v. Sparks, 23 Nebr. 142, 36 NW 375.

[b] Evidence of absence of a demand is admissible under a general denial. Burckwalter v. Mitchell, 27 S. C. 240, 3 SE 225.

[c] Evidence held inadmissible.—In an action to recover a bank note assigned to plaintiff by one accused of obtaining money by false pretenses, where only defenses pleaded were general denial and that the note belonged to persons whom accused had defrauded, and undisputed evidence shows it belongs to accused, evidence of whether assignment was in good faith is inadmissible. Hickey v. Coffey, 85 Or. 383, 166 P 959.

[d] In Idaho it is held that a special denial has the same effect as a general denial. Idaho Placer Min. Co. v. Green, 14 Ida. 249, 93 P 954.

[e] Matter changing issues.—In replevin aided by claim and delivery in which defendant pleaded a general denial, the action of the court in permitting defendant, without supplemental pleadings, to prove a recovery for the conversion of the goods by plaintiff pending the action was error. Gold Bros. Security Co. v. Hanken, 45 S. D. 363, 187 NW 636.

[f] Plaintiff under a general denial is entitled to the benefit of any evidence tending to show that the intervener, pleading ownership, did not der the general issue.[52]

[b] Rule applied.—(1) Under a general denial defendant may prove that a chattel mortgage relied on by plaintiff is void under the law of the state where made, without pleading it. Woods County Union Bank v. Shore, 87 Kan. 140, 123 P 880. (2) Where plaintiff alleges ownership generally, defendant need not allege that the bill of sale under which plaintiff claims is only a mortgage in order to introduce evidence to that effect. Francis v. Guaranty State Bank, 44 Okl. 446, 145 P 324. (3) Special plea claiming under sale from plaintiff's alleged vendee may be abandoned and matter proved under general denial. Kaufman v. [a] Rule applied.—Excluding defendant's evidence of an outstanding title in a third person under the general issue is error, although defendant did not connect himself therewith, where plaintiff relies solely upon title. Wright v. Bush, 165 Ala. 320, 51 S 635.

[b] In justice's court defendant could prove property in himself or a stranger under the general issue, and as the legislature has enlarged the defense under the general issue, the fact of property in a stranger is admissible without pleading it. Hall v. Henline, 9 Ind. 256; Lewis v. Masters, 6 Blackf. 243.

[c] Evidence of joint ownership by plaintiff and a third person is admissible under a general denial. Pulliam v. Burlingame, 81 Mo. 111, 51 AmR 229.

59. [a] Evidence held admissible: (1) A waiver of right to possession by plaintiff. Timberlake v. McArthur, 6 Oh. Dec. (Reprint) 925, 8 AmLRec 713. (2) Concealment of terms of mortgage from defendant, who could not read. Plano Mfg. Co. v. Person, 12 S. D. 448, 81 NW 897. (3) Fraud. Smith v. Brockett, 69 Conn. 492, 38 A 57; Cornwall v. Dean, 21 Kan. 73. (5) Ratification by plaintiff of an unauthorized sale by an agent. Curnane v. Scheidel, 70 Conn. 13, 38 A 875. (6) Sale to plaintiff, and subsequent mortgage and refusal of plaintiff to accept goods. Deford v. Hutchinson, 45 Kan. 332, 26 P 60 [mod 45 Kan. 318, 25 P 641, 11 LRA 257]. (7) That contract upon which plaintiff's right is based never was in effect. Lane v. O'Toole, 8 N. D. 210, 78 NW 77. (8) That plaintiff parted with the ownership and right of possession before commencement of the action. Ely v. Holloway, 95 Kan. 8, 147 P 1128. (9) That defendant bought the property from plaintiff's husband, and that plaintiff authorized or ratified the sale. Wylie v. Marinofsky, 201 Mass. 583, 88 NE 448. (10) That plaintiff's claim of right to possession was made in collusion with another, to defraud the defendant. Warner v. Carter, 109 Kan. 285, 198 P 960. (11) That plaintiff had parted with title. Jackson v. Frier, 146 S. C. 322, 144 SE 66. (12) That the property was deposited as a pledge. Tolbert v. Fouché, 118 S. C. 141, 110 SE 115. (13) That the mortgage under which plaintiff claimed statutory pleas of non detinet,[60] or not guilty;[61] but where defendant pleads the general issue of non cepit, he thereby puts in issue only the unlawful taking, and is precluded from showing title in himself,[62] or in a third person.[63]

Denial to cross complaint which alleges a right of possession, entitles the person so denying to prove a right to possession in himself.[64]

[§ 232] (c) Taking, Detention, and Possession. Under a general denial defendant may show that his detention of the property is rightful.[65] While it has been held that, in an action against an officer, a justification of the taking and detention as being under execution, attachment, or other process must be specially pleaded,[66] and cannot be shown under the general issue,[67] the weight of authority is that defendant may justify the taking or detention of the property or show his right to the possession thereof by virtue of such process under a general denial;[68] but that matter in justification or excuse cannot be shown under the common-law general issue of non cepit,[69] unless a notice of such special defense is annexed to the plea.[70] Under the general issue defendant may show that he was not in possession at the commencement of the action.[71]

[§ 233] (3) Under Avowry or Cognizance and Plea Thereto. Where defendant has avowed for rent and the issue no rent in arrear has been raised, plaintiff may prove tender by his assignee,[72] or fraud in inducing him to lease his own premises from defendant,[73] but he cannot show himself to be a stranger to the lease,[74] or that prior to the rent becoming in arrear he purchased the premises,[75] nor can he show that defendant had nothing in the tenements.[76] Upon failure of plaintiff to traverse an allegation in an avowry of the place of taking, it becomes immaterial, and a taking in another place than that alleged may be shown.[77] Fraud may be proved by defendant, even though he does not set forth in his avowry the facts constituting the fraud,[78] and he may disprove, without filing a counter affidavit, an account sworn to and attached to the declaration.[79]

possession was obtained by duress, or was without consideration. Iowa Sav. Bank v. Frink, 1 Nebr. (Unoff.) 14, 26, 92 NW 916. (14) That the sale, upon which plaintiff bases his title and right to possession, was absolutely void. Israel v. Day, 17 Colo. A. 200, 68 P 122 (no delivery and actual change of possession); Shipman Coal Min., etc., Co. v. Pfeiffer, 11 Ind. A. 445, 39 NE 291; Merrill v. Wedgwood, 25 Nebr. 283, 41 NW 149. (15) Transfer in fraud of creditors. Pan-American Amusement Co. v. Maguire, 142 Fed. 126, 73 CCA 344. (16) Where vendor of land, with lien on crops, brings action of claim and delivery, and sheriff takes possession of grain, and vendor's evidence shows that it is identical grain grown upon land, defendant may show contrary, thereby broadening issue beyond mere question of title and right to possession. [§ 235] 3. Variance. In replevin as in other civil actions,[82] a material variance between the pleading and proof is fatal,[83] although a slight or immaterial variance may be disregarded,[84] or may be corrected by amendment.[85]

Description of property. A material variance between allegations and proof, as to description of the property, is fatal;[86] but a slight discrepancy is not.[87]

Ownership of property. There is no variance between an allegation of ownership and proof from which ownership can be inferred.[88] Having pleaded special ownership, plaintiff cannot prove general ownership,[89] but where plaintiff has alleged ownership generally, proof of a special ownership is no variance.[90] An allegation of general or absolute ownership cannot be proved by evidence of a mortgage.[91] The variance is fatal between plaintiff's claim by virtue of a chattel mortgage, and proof of his right under another agreement,[92] or between allegations of ownership and proof of a chattel mortgage, not yet due.[93] Proof of joint ownership of plaintiff and defendant does not sustain plaintiff's allegation of ownership and right to exclusive possession.[94] Where the action is brought by partners, and the proof shows property is in one of them only, the variance is fatal.[95] There is no fatal variance between a statement in the notice given by claimant to the sheriff that the goods attached were the property of the claimant, and proof that he was a pledgee.[96]

Property in third person. Where defendant alleges ownership in himself, he cannot show property in a third person.[97]

Avowry. As defendant may avow generally for rent in arrear, a lease showing rental of a different piece of land than that referred to in the avowry is not a fatal variance.[98] Although the landlord maw avow generally,[99] he must prove his title to the rent as he alleges it.[1] Allegations in the avowry as to time when rent was due, and the amount due, must be proved as laid.[2] There is no variance between an avowry for rent from plaintiff as tenant of a certain house, and proof that he occupied only the upper part of the house.[3] There is a fatal variance between allegations in an avowry that plaintiff was a tenant for a certain time, and proof of tenancy for less time,[4] or between a plea of nothing in arrear except a sum specified which was tendered, and proof of tender of amount less than that specified.[5] Variance may be corrected by an amendment of an avowry to conform to proof of amount due.[6]

XIII. EVIDENCE

[By Joseph W. Rouse]

[§ 236] A. Presumptions and Burden of Proof—1. In General. The rules applicable to presumptions and burden of proof in civil actions generally[7] apply in actions of replevin.[8] Thus the burden is on plaintiff to establish his right to recover.[9] Where plaintiff has made out a prima facie case, the burden of proof is on defendant to show matter in justification or defense.[10] Plaintiff does not assume the burden of proving allegations which, although unnecessary to his recovery, have been made in anticipation of special defenses.[11]

Acts of officer. It is presumed that the officer executing the writ of replevin took the bond required by the statutes[12] and acted regularly.[13]

[§ 237] 2. Title and Right to Possession. Where ownership is established, in the absence of proof to the contrary, a presumption arises that the owner is entitled to possession;[14] and likewise, in the absence of any direct evidence to the contrary, possession is presumptive evidence of ownership,[15] although the contrary has been held;[16] but when direct evidence is offered, the fact of possession loses its presumptive character,[17] and is to be considered only in connection with other facts at its real probative value,[18] and no presumption arises where there is a conflict of evidence as to ownership.[19] When such matters are properly put in issue,[20] the burden rests on plaintiff to prove his title or ownership,[21] and his right to immediate[22] and exclusive[23] possession at the time the writ issued,[24] or, as otherwise stated, at the time of the commencement of the suit.[25] Thus an answer in replevin denying plaintiff's ownership of the property in controversy casts the burden of proof on him,[26] unless defendant disclaims all right to the property.[27] So in a plea of property in defendant, or a stranger, traversing plaintiff's ownership, the burden of the proof is on plaintiff;[28] but where the averment of property is a mere matter of inducement to the denial of plaintiff's right,[29] a plea of property in defendant or a third person, without a traverse of plaintiff's right, leaves the burden of proof on defendant to establish the truth of his plea.[30] Non cepit accompanied by a brief statement alleging property in defendant places the burden on plaintiff to prove property in himself,[31] but a brief statement merely alleging property in defendant leaves the burden on defendant to establish his affirmative allegation.[32] Where plaintiff has the burden of proving his right to the property and immediate possession thereof, the burden does not shift to defendant upon introduction of evidence tending to break down plaintiff's case.[33] Defendant has the burden of proving affirmative defenses.[34] The burden of proving ownership is not on defendants when

[a] Burden is on defendant to prove: (1) Title in himself by virtue of a perfected contract of exchange with plaintiff. Luce v. Brown, 96 Vt. 140, 118 A 530. (2) Bona fide purchase of stolen property. Harter v. People's Bank, 221 App. Div. 122, 223 NYS 118. (3) Receipt of notes in good faith, for value. Cooke v. Reserve Realty, etc., Co., (Mo. (5) That plaintiff has no right to maintain the action and that the property was exempt from the mortgage, where plaintiff bases his rights on a mortgage, the execution of which is admitted. Colean Mfg. Co. v. Johnson, 82 Kan. 655, 109 P 403, 20 Ann Cas 296. (6) Title to land, where defendant in replevin admitted the taking of the wood from the premises in plaintiff's possession, but claimed title to the land. Thompson v. Stever, 11 NYSt 784. (7) That he holds under an agreement with plaintiff, where he does not deny plaintiff's title. Crenshaw v. Bradley, 52 Ark. 318, 12 SW 578. (8) Prior payment of a note, where plaintiff claims property in payment of the note. Gravert v. Goothard, 81 Nebr. 99, 115 NW 559. (9) Affirmative allegations of ownership, where he demands a return. Wheeler v. Steadman, 99 Or. 414, 195 P 818. (10) Subsequent title in defendant, where plaintiff's original title is admitted. American Soda Fountain Co. v. Egbert, 14 Pa. Dist. 426. See also G. A. they claim merely the right to possession, and ownership is not in issue.[35]

Intervener. The burden of proving ownership is on an intervener.[36] An intervener, claiming the property by purchase, has the burden of proving title in his vendor.[37]

Surreptitious taking of property from plaintiff's possession raises a presumption that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to possession,[38] and the burden is on defendant to prove that he was owner and entitled to possession[39] and that the taking under writ of replevin was wrongful.[40]

[§ 238] 3. Taking, Detention, and Possession by Defendant. A wrongful taking and detention is not to be presumed,[41] but plaintiff has the burden of establishing it;[42] and such burden is not shifted to defendant by reason of special defenses being interposed as well as the general denial.[43] Where defendant obtained possession of the property lawfully, the burden is on plaintiff to show a termination of his right.[44] Plaintiff has the burden of proving defendant's possession at the time the action was commenced,[45] but the burden is on defendant to show that he had parted with it prior to the beginning of such action,[46] and on failure to do so it must be presumed that he still retains wrongful possession of the property.[47] Where plaintiff establishes a prima facie title and right to the possession of the property, it is incumbent on defendant to show how he came into the possession of it.[48]

Distress. The burden is on defendant to show a taking under distress warrant where the property admittedly belongs to plaintiff,[49] and to show the validity of the distress where it is attacked.[50]

Taking by officer under process is presumed to be lawful until plaintiff proves otherwise,[51] but defendant, seeking to justify a taking on the ground that he was an officer and took the property under an execution, has the burden of proving that he was an officer de jure,[52] that the property was subject to seizure under the execution,[53] and that the execution was supported by a valid[54] unsatisfied[55] judgment. Where, under an attachment writ, he takes property from a stranger, he has the burden of proving not only a writ valid on its face, but the regularity of the attachment proceedings.[56]

[§ 239] 4. Identity of Property. Where the identity of the property claimed by plaintiff is questioned, the burden is on him to establish that fact.[57] Where, however, plaintiff and defendant claim under dif-

[b] Title as against the world.—Where no right or title whatever appears in plaintiff, defendant, in order to entitle himself to a judgment for the value of the goods, need not, in addition to showing possession under a claim of title, prove that he has a title against all the world. [b] Judgment of justice of peace.—(1) Where the validity of an execution, issued by a justice of the peace, under which the property was taken, is questioned, defendant has the burden of proving a valid judgment (Hagen v. Delatine, 254 Ill. A. 211), (2) as a justice of the peace must enter a judgment before execution can issue (see Justices of the Peace § 341).

Miss.—Johnson v. Sanders, 148 Miss. 472, 114 S 334; Dennis v. Robinson, 104 Miss. 548, 61 S 597; Brunferent mortgages, and plaintiff offers evidence prima facie sufficient to show title in himself, the burden is on defendant to show that the property described in the mortgage under which he claims is the same as that in controversy.[58]

[§ 240] 5. Value and Damages. The value stated in the affidavit[59] is, in the absence of proof to the contrary, presumed to be the correct value.[60] In the absence of proof of the value of the replevied property at the time of the trial, it will be presumed to be of the same value then as found by the court when replevied,[61] and where the value of the property was agreed on in a contract of exchange, the burden of proving a different value is upon the party asserting it.[62] Where plaintiff gives bond and acquires the possession, it is not his duty to prove the value of the property,[63] and the same is true where he is in possession and does not seek damages.[64] Where plaintiff admits on the record the value of defendant's possession, and no evidence is given as to the general value of the property, it will be presumed that such value is equal to or exceeds the amount admitted by plaintiff as the value of defendant's special interest,[65] but no such presumption arises in the absence of any admission.[66] Plaintiff, having merely a special interest, who seeks to recover usable value of the property, has the burden of proving that the special interest included the right to use.[67] Plaintiff has the burden of proving the value of the property where a forthcoming bond is given.[68]

Where property is replevied from a sheriff, it is ordinarily incumbent upon him to prove the value of the property.[69]

Deprivation of use and depreciation. In the absence of proof that the damages are more or less than the interest on the value, the presumption is that the damages are the interest during the time the successful party was wrongfully deprived of the use.[70] The burden of proving depreciation is on plaintiff.[71]

Damage to defendant. The burden is on defendant to prove damages resulting from the taking of the property under the writ of replevin.[72]

[§ 241] 6. Fraud. The burden is on the party pleading fraud to prove it.[73] But where plaintiff's title is alleged by defendant to be fraudulent, plaintiff must first show title in himself.[74] Where plaintiff has alleged and proved fraud, the burden is on defendant to prove his defense of innocent purchaser for value.[75]

[§ 242] B. Admissibility—1. In General. The rules applicable to the admissibility of evidence in civil actions generally[76] apply in actions of replevin.[77]

Soper v. Michal, 123 Md. 542, 91 A 684, LRA1915A 232. (3) In replevin for a stock of goods traded to plaintiff with certain lots for other property, evidence as to defaults of plaintiff in making payments on the lots is properly excluded. Thompson v. Laven, 157 Minn. 333, 196 NW 475. (4) In replevin to determine the ownership of an automobile, defendant is not entitled to introduce evidence as to prior business relations between plaintiff and himself, where such evidence has no possible relations to the issue under the pleadings. McCoy v. Klein, 70 Pa. Super. 269. (5) Admission of writs of replevin issued in other cases by other plaintiffs, but served simultaneously with the writ in the present case, such evidence being offered to show undue oppression and a conspiracy is error where defendant wholly failed to show any connection of plaintiff with any unlawful conspiracy or oppression. Lublin Mfg. Co. v. Swaab, 240 Pa. 182, 87 A 597.

79. Merchants' Nat. Bank v. Frazier, 60 Okl. 156, 159 P 647.

[a] Rule applied.—(1) Where both plaintiff and defendant claim property of a third person by virtue of a lien, either party may show any fact which will defeat the other's rights. St. John State Bank v. Norduff, 2 Kan. A. 55, 43 P 312. (2) Defendant may show conversations between the owner and himself, where defendant and plaintiff claim by purchase from the owner. Marthinson v. Wagner, 63 Mich. 543, 30 NW 184. (3) An account, showing that decedent held similar goods of plaintiff for sale on commission, is admissible in evidence where plaintiff claims as owner and defendant as administrator. Lill's Chicago Brewery Co. v. Russell, 22 Wis. 178. (4) As the interest of an officer holding under an attachment is measured by the amount necessary to satisfy the attachment, plaintiff may introduce evidence to show a partial satisfaction of the debts. Kerr v. Drew, 90 Mo. 147, 2 SW 136. (5) Where defendant is a constable, his interest in the property is limited to the execution debtor's interest and plaintiff is entitled to show that the interest of the latter is merely nominal and of no value. Gillham v. Kerone, 45 Mo. 487. (6) Defendant officer, seizing goods under attachment, may show judgment in attachment suit, to show the extent of his lien. Berger v. Clippert, 53 Mich. 468, 19 NW 149.

[b] In Louisiana, in an exclusively possessory action, neither party can give evidence of title. An exception would probably take place where the extent of possession was disputed. Sears v. Wilson, 5 La. Ann. 689.

80. [a] Evidence held admissible.—(1) That defendant's bill of sale was in fact a mortgage which had been fully paid. Williams v. Griffin, 58 S. C. 370, 36 SE 665. (2) That plaintiffs had insured property immediately after sale, especially in view of their evidence that it was agreed that the property, if burnt, should be plaintiffs' loss. Andrews v. Grimes, 148 N. C. 437, 62 SE 519. (3) That plaintiff was in possession at a specified time. Curtis Studio v. Lennes, 121 Wash. 32, 208 P 79; Trowbridge v. Sickler, 54 Wis. 306, 11 NW 581 (not a conclusion of law). (4) That plaintiff got the property from his comortgagor, where defendant claims as assignee of the mortgagee. Williams v. Weekley, 100 S. C. 28, 84 SE 299 (that money to discharge a chattel mortgage to B, under which defendant claimed, had gone through the hands of C). (5) Purchase by plaintiff of goods and other property for use on the farm with his own money. Albright v. Albright, 151 Wis. 610, 139 NW 413. (6) Explaining bill of sale by showing that it was executed as a mortgage to secure indebtedness of agent. Adder Mach. Co. v. Ross, 184 Ill. A. 293. (7) Evidence refuting defendant's claim that an automobile was sold to his predecessor in title, where he claims by purchase from one who allegedly bought from the owner. Dever v. Girson, 75 Mont. 412, 243 P 812. (8) Testimony as to details of rescission of prior sale to third persons excluded where defendant claims prior sale, and agent testified to return of purchase price. Herman v. Rubin, 167 NYS 1038. (9) That a witness assisted in making inventory of articles involved. Ravine House Co. v. Bradstreet, (Vt.) 148 A 481. (10) A check drawn by plaintiff, payable to a third party to show that defendants' intestate was indebted to plaintiff, and that plaintiff agreed to cancel such indebtedness in payment for property replevied. Cobb v. Holloway, 129 Mo. A. 212, 108 SW 109. (11) Relationship of lessor and lessee between plaintiff and a person from whom defendant obtained the property. United Shoe Mach. Co. v. Bresnahan Shoe Mach. Co., 197 Mass. 206, 83 NE 412. (12) Agreement between owner and plaintiff to furnish the property to plaintiff for certain period. Brooke v. Berry, 1 Gill (Md.) 153. (13) Assumption of liabilities of character naturally expected of a bona fide holder. Hosmer v. Moseley, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 211 (on the issue whether plaintiff's title is real or colorable). (14) Quality of property, as to whether it was cut from logs belonging to plaintiff. Jenkins v. Steanka, 19 Wis. 126, 88 AmD 675. (15) Mortgagor's testimony that the phrase "building and appurtenances thereon" was not in the mortgage when executed, to show that the mortgagee believed he had no lien on articles he considered appurtenances at such time. Arlt v. Langley, (S. D.) 227 NW 469. (16) Testimony, while not responsive nor material, which nevertheless was not prejudicial. Willoughby v. Smith, 26 N. D. 209, 144 NW 79. (17) Plaintiff's knowledge of defendant's financial condition, to show the unreasonableness of defendant's claim that the mules had been bought for him by plaintiff. McKay v. Wishert, (Tex. Civ. A.) 152 SW 508.

[b] Evidence held inadmissible.—(1) Oral agreement contradicting the terms of a note. Wilton v. Manitoba Independent Oil Co., 25 Man. 628. (2) That a witness had not heard of sale to defendant's mortgagor. Lansley v. Van Alstyne, 81 Iowa 476, 46 NW 1119. (3) Promise of defendant to give plaintiff cotton in payment of a debt, where not identified and separated. McDaniel v. Allen, 99 N. C. 135, 5 SE 737. (4) Parol evidence of contract of sale, where written evidence was available. Hatch v. Fowler, 28 Mich. 205. (5) Payments to plaintiff by a person having possession under a contract prior to defendant's taking over and assuming such person's obligations. Kaufman v. Cooper, 38 Mont. 6, 98 P 504, 1135. (6) That plaintiff read a certain paper, in defendant's absence, at a meeting of scientists, in which plaintiff claimed the property. Root v. Borst, 142 N. Y. 62, 36 NE 814. (7) Notes signed by defendant and plaintiff's brother, and the testimony of a bank employee that plaintiff's brother had paid the bank a certain sum on notes of himself and defendant. McKay v. Wishert, (Tex. Civ. A.) 152 SW 508. (8) In replevin by a legatee against the executor for a specific bequest, testimony from the legatee tending to show that the property had been promised to him before the testator's death, but not as a gift in præsenti or causa mortis. Eberstein v. Camp, 37 Mich. 176. (9) In claim and delivery for horses agreed to be exchanged for machinery under a contract which was signed by plaintiff, a third person, and defendant, evidence that when the machinery was purchased it was stated that plaintiff was the purchaser, and that the third person did not receive any consideration for signing the contract. Harris v. Lyons, 30 S. D. 272, 138 NW 295.

[c] Cumulative evidence is not objectionable. Wiley v. McGrath, 194 Pa. 498, 45 A 331, 75 AmSR 709 (lease of property, assignment to plaintiff, and fire insurance policy, in addition to bill of sale).

[d] On rebuttal plaintiff will not be permitted to make out a different right from that on which he rested his case in the first instance. Woolston v. Smead, 42 Mich. 54, 3 NW 251.

81. Schleiff v. McDonald, 41 Ida. 50, 237 P 1108; Idaho Placer Min. Co. v. Green, 14 Ida. 249, 93 P 954; Sorlie v. Manthey, 55 N. D. 71, 212 NW 400.

[a] Evidence held admissible.—(1) Assumption of debts of owner by defendant as consideration for a transfer to defendant. Wallace v. Wallace, 62 Iowa 651, 17 NW 905. (2) That defendant elected to purchase goods sent him by plaintiff to buy, or receive on consignment. Yaeger Milling Co. v. Brown, 128 Mass. 171. (3) Showing property in a partnership instead of administrator's decedent. Benar v. Lippus, 18 Pa. Dist. 241. (4) To show payment for automobile. Davenport v. Alexander, 53 Cal. A. 688, 200 P 771. (5) To disprove reservation of house. Cunningham v. Atterbury, 166 Mo. A. 137, 148 SW 176. (6) To show mortgage under which defendant claimed. Schleiff v. McDonald, 41 Ida. 50, 237 P 1108. (7) Identity of corporation, vendor, as bearing on ownership. Churchill v. More, 4 Cal. A. 219, 88 P 290. (8) Parol evidence of mortgage, which defendant claims plaintiff assumed. Peeples v. Warren, 51 S. C. 560, 29 SE 659. (9) Intent of plaintiff on question whether plaintiff had agister's lien. Davey v. Davey, 81 Mont. 375, 263 P 415. (10) That defendants did not owe plaintiff anything. Sorlie v. Manthey, 55 N. D. 71, 212 NW 400.

[b] Evidence held inadmissible.—(1) Evidence of defendant to show what induced a surety to sign a replevin bond is irrelevant to the issue of plaintiff's exclusive ownership. Dannels v. Fitch, 8 Pa. 495. (2) Evidence in relation to trial by jury summoned by a constable to try the question of ownership for the constable's protection, it not concluding claimant's right. Hexter v. Schneider, 14 Or. 184, 12 P 668. (3) Evidence that the corporation which defendant alleged as being the owner of the property involved did not exist was immaterial. Curtis Studio v. Lennes, 121 Wash. 32, 208 P 79. (4) Testimony of a sheriff that the execution debtor said nothing when he seized property is inadmissible for defendant to contest plaintiff's claim that he owned the property and the execution debtor had purchased it merely as his agent. Minthon v. Lewis, 78 Iowa 620, 43 NW 465 (the debtor not having testified). (5) Evidence of notes of plaintiff in a bank, and the management of the farm and property by the husband, where property was seized on attachment as property of plaintiff's husband. Gould v. Sanders, 69 Mich. 5, 37 NW 37. (6) Defendant having shown a third person's acts of possession over the same and similar property, evidence of sale of the similar property after the controversy arose is immaterial. Edmunds v. Leavitt, 27 N. H. 198. (7) Evidence, not purporting to contradict plaintiff's right to possession,[82] unless the genuineness of the instrument is questioned, and no attempt is made to establish the same,[83] and on the part of defendant to show title or right to possession in himself or a third person as against plaintiff,[84] but such evidence must be relevant to, and connected with, the litigation.[85] Where the ownership of the property is in dispute, evidence of performance by the alleged owner of acts of dominion raising a presumption of ownership is admissible.[86] Where defendant has not disputed the character of plaintiff's rights as set out in the pleadings, evidence of reputed ownership in himself is inadmissible.[87] Abandonment or parting with possession by plaintiff may be shown by competent evidence.[88] Evidence of matters occurring after commencement of the action is inadmissible,[89] as plaintiff's right to recover depends on his rights existent at the commencement of the ac-testimony showing payment of a note so as to give the right to repossess himself of property pledged as security. Goodell v. Ward, 17 Minn. 17. (8) Evidence that defendants had no knowledge of chattel mortgage under which plaintiff claims. Farrar v. Snyder, 31 Mo. A. 93. (9) Evidence that defendants paid judgment in foreclosure action, where foreclosure judgment determined that defendants had no interest in cattle. Foster v. Fernandes, 205 Cal. 128, 270 P 188. (10) Evidence of failure to pay agreed rental, in action to recover property displayed on defendant's premises, plaintiff retaining title. Buckingham Radio Corp. v. Persion Furniture Co., 191 Wis. 391, 211 NW 269. (11) Execution in which plaintiff was defendant, and under which property was redelivered to him on a forthcoming bond. Lynch v. Welsh, 3 Pa. 294. (12) Excluding testimony as to who paid for the automobile as between plaintiff and her husband is proper, the sole question being who has right of possession. Cope-Shanks Motor Co. v. Herzig, 33 Oh. A. 345, 169 NE 581. (13) Where defendant claimed certain steers sued for under a renewal chattel mortgage, and the first mortgage did not cover such steers, whether plaintiff bought any of the property covered by the first mortgage was immaterial. Kime v. Edgemont Bank, 22 S. D. 630, 119 NW 1003 (evidence as to the amount of stock in the mortgagor's possession a year after the mortgage was given was irrelevant).

[c] Writ upon which property was attached, with the officer's return upon it, and the schedule of the attached property, are admissible in evidence, in an action of replevin to recover the property, in justification of defendant's title, and are not rendered incompetent by the fact that, at the time when the replevin suit was brought, execution had been issued and levied upon the property attached. Bray v. Raymond, 166 Mass. 146, 44 NE 131.

[d] General allegations of ownership entitle defendant to meet the case-made by plaintiff's evidence by any competent proof that tends to show that such evidence is untrue. Kerron v. North Pacific Lumbering, etc., Co., 1 Wash. 241, 24 P 445.

[a] Evidence held admissible.—(1) Affidavit of plaintiff, requisition on sheriff, and sheriff's return, to show that defendant rebonded the property and therefor, plaintiff being a prevailing party, not in possession, the referee should have assessed the value and ordered judgment accordingly. Bennett v. Schuster, 24 Minn. 383. (2) Assignment conveying title to a note and mortgage of property to plaintiff. Flinn v. Ferry, 127 Cal. 648, 60 P 434. (3) Bills of sale. Bonesteel v. Gardner, 1 Dak. 372, 46 NW 590 (holding that a bill of sale to a plaintiff in replevin from a third party through whom he claims title is not inadmissible as res inter alios acta); Benn v. Oliver, (Iowa) 80 NW 392. (4) A deed from defendant to a third person, after an agreement to transfer title to a lot to be exchanged for plaintiff's groceries, is admissible on the part of plaintiff. Crawford v. Hurd, 106 SW 849, 32 KyL 636. (5) Divorce decree, conveyances of the president of plaintiff corporation to her sister, conveyances from the sister to plaintiff, conveyances from the president direct to plaintiff, and the minutes of plaintiff showing an acceptance of the property. Curtis Studio v. Lennes, 121 Wash. 32, 208 P 79. (6) A lease and assignments thereof, to show plaintiff's right to possession and ownership. Churchill v. More, 4 Cal. A. 219, 88 P 290. (7) Mortgages. Lansley v. Van Alstyne, 81 Iowa 476, 46 NW 1119; Shattuck v. Hall, 3 Kan. A. 374, 42 P 1101. (8) Notes. C. I. T. Corp. v. Straub, (Mo. A.) 11 SW (2d) 759 (action based on chattel mortgage securing note). (9) Notes and mortgage bearing notation, "Canceled by foreclosure of security, December 17." Bailey v. Sullivan, 75 Colo. 346, 225 P 830. (10) Note, mortgage, and check, to show real purchase by plaintiff. Haberer v. Walzer, 109 Ill. A. 371. (11) Record indebtedness of defendant's vendor to show absence of title in the vendor or defendant. Keefer v. Keefer, 9 Pa. Super. 53.

[b] Evidence held inadmissible.—(1) Where defendant claimed ownership of property by agreement with a third person, a bill of sale of the property from the third person to plaintiff is inadmissible in the absence of a foundation laid impugning defendant's title. Metropolitan Lumber Co. v. McColeman, 140 Mich. 333, 103 NW 809. (2) Plaintiff having alleged absolute ownership, a chattel mortgage is inadmissible to prove his right to possession. Powers v. Benson, 120 Iowa 428, 94 NW 929.

[84] [a] Evidence held admissible.—(1) Bill of sale. Adder Mach. Co. v. Ross, 184 Ill. A. 293; Leavitt v. Shook, 47 Or. 239, 83 P 391. (2) A certified copy of the mortage, filed in another county, without proof that it was recorded, where defendant also relied on another mortgage recorded in the county of plaintiff's residence. Parkhurst v. Sharp, 10 Kan. A. 575, 61 P 531. (3) Deeds to land, with proof of adverse possession. Richbourg v. Rose, 53 Fla. 173, 44 S 69, 125 AmSR 1061. (4) A deed to property on which machinery was, and the record of the court quieting title, to show the right in defendant. Fox v. Cox, 20 Ind. A. 61, 50 NE 92. (5) A letter from plaintiff to defendant, to show that defendant obtained title to the property. Cox v. Burdett, 23 Pa. Super. 346. (6) A mortgage to defendant by a third person against whom plaintiff claims adversely. Saenz v. Mumme Co., (Tex. Civ. A.) 85 SW 59 (it is immaterial that plaintiff was not present, or knew of it, or when it was recorded).

[b] Evidence held inadmissible.—Where each party claims property through a right to Indian reservation land on which it grew, admission of a permit of a clerk of an Indian agent to defendant is error where it is not shown that the clerk had control of the land, or that plaintiff gave him authority. Snyder v. Anderson, 1 Nebr. (Unoff.) 406, 95 NW 698.

[85] [a] Evidence held inadmissible.—(1) A blank order for the shipment of goods, proving nothing on its face, and in no wise connected with the property in controversy, cannot be introduced by plaintiff to show title and right to possession. Northwall Co. v. McCormick Harvester Mach. Co., 2 Nebr. (Unoff.) 699, 89 NW 767. (2) Books of account of a third person, not a party to the suit. Watrous v. Cunningham, 65 Cal. 410, 4 P 408. (3) A chattel mortgage executed by a third party and secured by the cattle and an agreement between plaintiff's husband and such third person under which the husband loaned the cattle to such third person are inadmissible against plaintiff, where there is no evidence that plaintiff was connected with these exhibits or knew of them until the trial. Roberts v. Little, 18 N. D. 608, 120 NW 563. (4) Chattel mortgages held by strangers to record. C. I. T. Corp. v. Straub, (Mo. A.) 11 SW (2d) 759. (5) A promissory note of defendants, admittedly paid, and in no wise connected with plaintiff's claim, is inadmissible on behalf of plaintiff. French v. Parker, (Kan. A.) 52 P 910. (6) In replevin by a father to recover property attached in an action by his daughter-in-law against her husband for support, the petition in her action for support, alleging neglect and ill treatment by her husband, her poverty, and her husband's failure to support her is immaterial and irrelevant. tion.[90] Declarations of the parties or of third persons alleged to have an interest in the property, bearing on the question of title or right to possession of the property, are admissible.[91] Evidence of title in plaintiff may be rebutted by showing title in a third person.[92] But evidence on behalf of defendant that persons other than plaintiff claim the property is not admissible unless it is shown, or offered to be shown, that the right claimed is derived through plaintiff or owner of such property.[93]

[§ 244] 3. Taking and Detention. Any legal evidence tending to prove the wrongful taking or detention of the property replevied,[94] such as proof of demand and refusal,[95] or any evidence tending to justify such taking or detention,[96] is admissible. But evidence showing the intention of defendant in taking and appropriating the property is immaterial, since his liability does not depend upon his intention.[97] Where defendant has given a redelivery bond evidence is inadmissible to show that he did not receive a part of the property described therein.[98]

[§ 245] 4. Identity of Property. As bearing on the identity of the property, any competent evidence is admissible.[99] Evidence that a thief admitted having stolen the property and took the sheriff to defendant with whom he had disposed of it is

[a] Evidence held admissible to show demand.—Plaintiff may introduce letter to agent, where demand made by agent, to show agent's authority to demand. New York City State Bank v. Waterhouse, 70 Conn. 76, 38 A 904, 66 AmSR 82.

96. Townsend v. Newell, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 332; Hubbardston Lumber Co. v. Covert, 35 Mich. 254.

[a] Evidence held admissible.—(1) Evidence that defendant, who originally sold the automobile to plaintiff under a conditional sale contract, but who had transferred the notes and the conditional contract, took possession as agent of the transferee, was admissible to show the taking of possession was lawful. Rapp v. Mabbett Motor Car Co., 201 App. Div. 283, 194 NYS 200. (2) Evidence of an agreement between the lessor and the lessee that part of the lessor's property became the lessee's is admissible to show that such property was subject to execution, in an action by the lessor against defendant sheriff who took the property under execution against the lessee. Lemmon v. Beattie, 41 Colo. 68, 91 P 1102. (3) Defendant may show that he acquired a lawful lien on the horse by reason of its straying on his property and damaging it, and that the owner could not recover possession, with consequent destruction of defendant's lien, except on the conditions contemplated by the statute covering such cases. Taylor v. Orndoff, 70 Pa. Super. 385. (4) An order of a live stock sanitary commission of a sheriff, requiring him to seize cattle, is admissible as a prima facie justification of the taking and detention. Hardwick v. Brookover, 48 Kan. 609, 30 P 21. (5) An execution, regular on its face, is admissible on behalf of an officer without proof of judgment. Kahn v. Hayes, 22 Ind. A. 182, 53 NE 430.

97. Ecker v. Moore, 2 Pinn. (Wis.) 425, 2 Chandl. 85.

98. Gaulden v. Hill, 81 Fla. 251, 87 S 758.

[a] Rule applied.—The recital in a forthcoming bond of the amount of property in defendant's possession does not preclude plaintiff from proving that he claims less property than is described in the affidavit or in the bond, and such testimony does not permit defendant to prove that less property was replevied than claimed by plaintiff. Gaulden v. Hill, 81 Fla. 251, 87 S 758.

99. See cases infra this note; and notes 1, 2.

[a] Evidence held admissible.—(1) In replevin of a stolen automobile, where the numbers were ground off and some other figures substituted, it is competent to identify by other means, such as marks, scratches, and other peculiarities, if such circumstances sufficiently identify. Wald v. Auto Salvage, etc., Co., 190 Iowa 11, 179 NW 856. (2) Where, in claim and delivery for sheep, the complaint described them with reasonable certainty, and plaintiff's testimony as to the identity of the sheep demanded corresponded with the complaint, additional evidence that the sheep had been marked with paint, and that in defendant's sacks of fleeces taken from yearling sheep fleeces were discovered bearing similar color marks, was admissible as tending further to identify the property. Fox v. Tift, 57 Or. 268, 111 P 51, AnnCas1912D 845.

admissible to identify the property in the hands of defendant.[1] The record of a conviction for larceny is inadmissible to identify property claimed to have been pawned with defendant by the thief.[2]

[§ 246] 5. Value and Damages—a. In General. It is proper in an action of replevin to allow plaintiff to show the value of the property, to aid the jury in assessing his damages.[3] Evidence is admissible to show that a party has placed a certain value on property.[4] Evidence of the cost of manufacturing an article and transporting it to market,[5] and of the state of the market as to supply and demand,[6] is admissible to show value or to aid in assessing damages, and where the property has no market value, the owner's estimate of its value to him is admissible as evidence of its value.[7] However, estimates in an appraisal of property made by one whose action does not legally affect the party against whom the evidence is offered is incompetent.[8] Evidence is admissible on behalf of defendant to show that an estimate, upon which plaintiff relies to determine the value, extended only to a part of the property;[9] but evidence of the value of property exchanged for that of plaintiff by one having no authority to do so is inadmissible where plaintiff had nothing to do with the property.[10]

The affidavit[11] is competent evidence of the value of the property.[12] Defendant, not being bound by the value set by plaintiff in his affidavit of value, may produce testimony to show a lesser value,[13] but plaintiff cannot introduce evidence to show a different value.[14]

Damages. Plaintiff's testimony as to what damage he suffered is not inadmissible as being a conclusion of law.[15] Evidence of conversion by defendant during the pendency of the action is admissible as a means of estimating damage.[16] In replevin of property wrongfully sold to defendant, evidence that defendant's vendor appropriated the full purchase price is admissible to show the amount of plaintiff's damages.[17] Evidence of the use value of the property during the time of its detention is admissible on behalf of defendant, where plaintiff wrongfully replevied the property.[18] On the question of damages defendant may introduce evidence to show improvements and expenditures on property prior to the action.[19]

On the question of punitive damages, plaintiff may prove the circumstances leading up to the taking by defendant.[20] The giving of a redelivery bond is not admissible to show malice in defendant's taking of property,[21] and evidence of indebtedness of plaintiff to defendant is inadmissible to show defendant's want of malice.[22]

In mitigation of damages it has been held that plaintiff in replevin may prove a return of the property, or a part of it, to defendant,[23] or payments on the judgment under which the property replevied was seized,[24] after the commencement of the replevin suit, and before judgment. And after plaintiff in replevin has been nonsuited, he may still show that defendant has sustained no substantial damages, for the reason that he was not the owner of the property.[25]

(8) Testimony of the assignor of the goods as to their value when he was in possession is competent. Gevers v. Farmer, 109 Iowa 468, 80 NW 535.

[b] Evidence held inadmissible.—(1) Speed of particular horses of same blood as stallion. Ellis v. Simpkins, 81 Mich. 1, 45 NW 646 (where defendant had been permitted to show the speed of certain horses of the blood of the one sued for, it was error not to allow plaintiff, on rebuttal, to show that certain horses of the same blood had not developed into fast trotters). (2) Value of other property described in a bill of sale under which plaintiff claims. Burrill v. Wilcox Lumber Co., 65 Mich. 571, 32 NW 824.

[c] Place of valuation.—In an action against a sheriff in replevin for certain property seized by such sheriff while the property was in transit, evidence as to the market value of such property at the place of shipment is admissible, as tending to show, in connection with other testimony, its market value at the place of detention. Newton v. Brown, 1 Utah 287.

[§ 247] b. Time of Valuation. Evidence showing the value of the property some time previous to the bringing of an action for its recovery or the value thereof is admissible, having some bearing upon the value at the date of the suit,[26] and where the value is determined as of the time of the taking[27] evidence of value a reasonable time before or after the taking is admissible;[28] but evidence of value at a time too remote from the time of the trial to have any bearing on the value then has been held inadmissible.[29] So it is competent to show the condition of the property at any time after the commencement of the action and before judgment, such condition being a result of the detention,[30] although evidence of an increased value at the date of trial as compared with the value when the action was commenced has been held inadmissible,[31] but under a statute requiring the assessment of value as of the date of the trial when the verdict is for plaintiff and defendant is in possession[32] it has been held improper to admit evidence of payment by defendant of a mortgage on the property after commencement of the action.[33]

[§ 248] 6. Fraud. Any competent evidence is admissible in behalf of either party to prove fraud or bad faith in the acquisition of the property.[34] Evidence that plaintiff, who claimed the property by purchase from the judgment debtor, kept a house of ill fame at the time of the purchase, is not admissible as bearing upon the question of bad faith in such purchase.[35]

[§ 249] C. Weight and Sufficiency of Evidence—1. In General. In accordance with the rules governing the weight and sufficiency of evidence in civil actions generally,[36] plaintiff must establish his right to recover by a preponderance of the evidence,[37] but it is not necessary to prove material facts beyond a reasonable doubt.[38] Defendant must establish his defense by a preponderance of the evidence.[39] A rule of court providing that statements of fact in pleading verified by affidavits shall be conclusive if not denied by a verified plea has been held not to apply to an action of replevin.[40]

Russell v. Brooks, 92 Ark. 509, 122 SW 649. (7) In replevin by an assignee for creditors of property attached by creditors of the assignor while in the assignee's possession, the creditors may show the fraudulent character of the assignment. Morehead v. Adams, 18 Nebr. 569, 26 NW 242.

[b] Evidence held inadmissible.—(1) Affidavits for attachment, not connected with the subject matter of the suit. Price Baking Powder Co. v. Rinear, 17 Wash. 95, 49 P 223. (2) Where the issue was whether plaintiff's animal had been procured from him through the fraud of third persons, who had transferred the same to defendants, the contents of a grip in the possession of the third persons were inadmissible, in the absence of a showing that the articles therein tended to show that the third persons had perpetrated a fraud. Russell v. Brooks, 92 Ark. 509, 122 SW 649.

[c] Great latitude of proof is permitted where the question in an action of replevin is one of fraud, and the testimony of a witness which relates to a transaction with one not a party to the suit is competent. Katzenberger v. Leedom, 103 Tenn. 144, 52 SW 35.

[a] Replevin of stolen property.—(1) In replevin to recover money in the hands of property clerk of police department, claimed to have been stolen from plaintiff by its employee, and which had been taken from employee, by a police officer, where the employee denied that money had been stolen, and claimed that the money taken from him was his own, plaintiff had the burden of proving his case by a fair preponderance of evidence, and was not required to sustain the burden beyond a reasonable doubt. Hecker-Jones-Jewell Milling Co. v. Murray, 178 NYS 335 (evidence held sufficient). (2) Where plaintiff claims property by assignment as attorney for one who bought it with stolen money, a preponderance of evidence is sufficient to establish the larceny of money and subsequent purchase of the property. Masterson v. Union Bank, etc., Co., 86 Wash. 560, 150 P 1126, LRA1918A 531 (evidence of delivery to client, failure of client to deliver, quitting job, purchase of bank drafts and jewelry, etc., and ticket to Japan, totalling the amount stolen).

A. 516, 129 NE 280; Dannenberg v. Teeters, 126 Kan. 28, 266 P 744. (5) Right to possession. Hardison Perforating Co. v. Davies, 33 Cal. A. 738, 166 P 361 (evidence showing lease by plaintiff to tenant of defendant, instead of sale); Shevlin-Mathieu Lumber Co. v. Rainy Lake River Boom Corp., 115 Minn. 533, 132 NW 263; Namakan Lumber Co. v. Rainy Lake River Boom Corp., 115 Minn. 296, 132 NW 259 (in both cases, act and conduct of parties relative to property); Bernick v. McClure, 107 Minn. 9, 119 NW 247 (evidence showing right by virtue of mortgage); St. Victor v. Edwards, 155 Mo. A. 566, 134 SW 1105 (evidence showing that plaintiff was entitled to possession of the note as against the objection that it had been delivered to the maker on the theory that it had been paid by the acceptance of a testamentary gift); Chadwell v. Brown, 88 Okl. 44, 211 P 410 (evidence showing that defendants had converted the property of plaintiffs to their own use prior to the time of the commencement of the replevin action so as to waive their lien); Iowa Nat. Bank v. Woonsocket Citizens' Nat. Bank, 70 Okl. 1, 172 P 924 (evidence of right in plaintiff prior to mortgage to intervener, and notice of such right at time intervener took the mortgage); Kebabian v. Adams Express Co., 28 R. I. 177, 66 A 201 (evidence showing that plaintiff directed a third person to ship goods by defendant). (6) Special interest. Agnew v. Baker, 204 Ill. A. 56 (that plaintiff, as alderman, took possession and delivered car to defendant for repairs; Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Witt, 112 Kan. 82, 209 P 815 (evidence showing purchase from plaintiff, and giving of chattel mortgage to him).

[c] Evidence held insufficient to show: (1) Lien claimed by plaintiff. Samberg v. Kelly, 163 Ill. A. 395; Sullivan v. Hansen, 95 Nebr. 779, 146 NW 983. (2) Ownership. Beal v. McKee, 145 Ala. 659, 39 S 664; Robinson v. Calloway, 4 Ark. 94; Dowd v. Russell, 78 Cal. A. 262, 248 P 293; Austin v. Terry, 38 Colo. 407, 88 P 189; Mountain Home Sheep Co. v. Faraday, 36 Ida. 633, 212 P 970; Dederick v. Brandt, 16 Ind. [a] Evidence held sufficient to show: (1) Joint ownership between defendant and plaintiff. McDowell v. Hollingsworth, (Mo. A.) 10 SW (2d) 314; American Packing Co. v. Luketa, 98 Wash. 6, 167 P 87 (ownership of undivided interest by intervener). (2) Retention of title by defendant although he placed the property in the hands of a third person. Hogan Finance, etc., Co. v. Mead, 205 Cal. 1, 269 P 610 (evidence of agreements, and manner of conducting business). (3) Right to possession in defendant. Hambright, etc., Co. v. Provident Pledge Corp., 25 Cal. A. 600, 144 P 971 (evidence to show that plaintiff delivered the property to the pledgor and agreed to transfer the title to him, and that the pledgor might dispose of the property); Bruce v. Squires, 68 Kan. 199, 74 P 1102 (evidence that attachment was issued at the suit of a bona fide creditor, and that the attachment process is valid, is sufficient to entitle the officer to hold possession until a better right is shown); Eichorn v. Schochie, 154 Minn. 261, 191 NW 737 (evidence that defendant purchaser on deferred payments was never in default, and that he did not put the property to an unlawful use). (4) Title in defendant. Clements v. Terrell, (Ark.) 190 SW 451 (a note retaining title to a mule found among papers of defendant's testator who was the original defendant); Chalmers v. Bowen, 112 Ark. 63, 164 SW 1131 (evidence showing sale and delivery to defendant by agent of plaintiff); Foster v. Fernandes, 205 Cal. 128, 270 P 188 (evidence showing that defendants were good-faith purchasers from codefendant previously taking possession under claim and delivery process); Keller v. Lile, 91 Cal. A. 585, 267 P 124 (evidence showing that stock certificate transferred by plaintiff to defendant was in payment for defendant's services); Grossman v. Yip Wing, 62 Cal. A. 121, 216 P 634 (evidence as to surveys of large tract containing part leased to defendant, although no direct or positive testimony that the tract was embraced therein); Al G. Barnes Shows Co. v. Toyo Kisen Kaisha Oriental SS. Co., 61 Cal. A. 304, 214 P 1015 (evidence that defendant bought animals in his own name, paid export duties, arranged transportation, etc.); Bradley v. McDonald, 36 Cal. A. 807, 169 P 427 (evidence showing payment under contract of sale); Parker v. Freeman, 11 Colo. 576, 19 P 601 (evidence showing that plaintiff intrusted property to an agent, giving him full control over it, and that defendant purchased from the agent); Lewis County v. Peck State Bank, 31 Ida. 244, 170 P 98 (evidence showing that notes were never delivered to plaintiff county nor to its treasurer, the payee in the note, nor to any one else on its behalf); Killeen v. Greve, 182 Iowa 1382, 166 NW 731 (evidence showing that defendant had never agreed to sell the colt in controversy to plaintiff); Canfield Lumber Co. v. Nan M. Canfield Security Storage Co., (Iowa) 133 NW 323 (evidence showing defendant was given piano as wedding gift, and was her property and not that of plaintiff); Le Pak v. Hedberg, 170 Minn. 495, 213 NW 40 (evidence that logs were removed from premises described in defendants' logging permit); Dalton Adding Mach. Co. v. Bailey, 137 Minn. 61, 162 NW 1059 (evidence that a person from whom defendant purchased was sales agent of plaintiff, authorized to sell goods, and that a valid sale existed); Koelling v. August Gas Bank Note, etc., Co., 97 Mo. A. 664, 71 SW 728 (evidence that purchaser at mortgage sale acted as agent of defendant's grantor); Warrick v. Rasmussen, 112 Nebr. 299, 199 NW 544 (evidence of purchase by defendant and ratification by plaintiff mortgagee); Gravert v. Goothard, 81 Nebr. 99, 115 NW 559 (prior payment of note, in action for corn alleged by plaintiff to be his in payment of note); May v. Mendota First Nat. Bank, 74 Nebr. 251, 104 NW 184 (evidence showing plaintiffs estopped to maintain action against defendant, an innocent purchaser); Allen Clark Co. v. Francovich, 42 Nev. 321, 176 P 259 (deed whereby heir conveyed all the interest "he may now hold" or "may now have" in the estate where prior thereto he had conveyed to third party all his right, title, and interest to all property which he had received, or which he was to receive, from the estate); Vig v. Hustel, 50 S. D. 364, 210 NW 156 (evidence of positive identification of turkeys by defendant's wife); Kimball v. Donohue, 124 Wash. 505, 214 P 1045, 217 P 37 (evidence showing that defendant negotiated the purchase and made all payments except one, receipt for which was found among decedent's papers, in replevin by decedent's representative); Masterson v. Union Bank, etc., Co., 86 Wash. 560, 150 P 1126, LRA 1918A 531 (evidence that plaintiff, when he received the bill of sale, knew that the articles had been purchased with stolen funds); Nelson v. Consolidated El., etc., Co., 32 Wyo. 181, 231 P 397 (that stored wheat replevied by plaintiffs belonged to interveners). (5) Right to possession in third person. Chandless v. Globe Storage, etc., Co., 49 Misc. 562, 98 NYS 511.

[b] Evidence held insufficient to show: (1) Lien in defendant. Canadian Car, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania Iron Works Co., 256 Fed. 339 (notice by defendant to plaintiff that it would charge storage unless plaintiff removed property, but no contract). (2) Right to possession in corporate defendant. New York City Public Bank v. Rosendorf, 166 NYS 734 (evidence showing corporate defendant was not in existence at the time of delivery to defendant, and no evidence to show any transfer to the corporation). (3) Right to possession under a mortgage. Roberts v. Little, 18 N. D. 608, 120 NW 563; Kime v. Edgmont Bank, 22 S. D. 630, 119 NW 1003 (where defendant claimed steers under a renewal chattel mortgage from the sellers to plaintiff, but which were not covered by the original mortgage, but the renewal mortgage purported to cover thirty one two-year-old steers of a certain brand and declared the property to be all the stock the mortgagors then owned, without proof that the sellers of the steers to plaintiff did not own and have in their possession thirty one two-year-old steers at the time they executed the renewal mortgage, in addition to those plaintiff had purchased and of which he had not yet taken possession, the defense was not established). (4) Title in defendant. Jordan v. Walker, 197 Ind. 365, 151 NE 2 (belief of defendant as ownership of cattle is insufficient to show right to keep possession); Cosgrove v. Kohler, 45 Minn. 148, 47 NW 539 (evidence that third person took note for price of the property, and negotiated it); Schlitz Brewing Co. v. Grimmon, 28 Nev. 235, 81 P 43; Porzio v. Murray, 182 NYS 817 (evidence supporting merely the conclusion that the property claimed by plaintiff and property claimed by defendant were not necessarily different); Pierce v. Van Dyke, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 613 (receipt signed by defendant stating note was left with him for collection); Lucas v. King, 64 Okl. 18, 165 P 165 (evidence of accounts, mortgage sales, etc.); Harrison Bank v. Porter, 17 Okl. 256, 87 P 585 (evidence not showing that property claimed was not property to which plaintiff was entitled); Hayden v. McMillan, 79 Pa. Super. 1 (evidence that defendant bought from plaintiff's bailee, who had merely possession of the property, is insufficient where plaintiff's evidence shows title); Eisenberger v. Auto Maintenance Co., 48 Pa. Super. 476; Hydraulic Cement Block Co. v. Christensen, 38 Utah 525, 114 P 524 (where all defendant shows is a bill of sale unconnected with plaintiff's title, there being uncontradicted evidence that plaintiff had previously bought the property, and no evidence that it had parted with its title); McRorie v. Seward, 3 Sask. L. 69 (evidence not showing bona fide purchase). (5) Title in a company in which defendant was interested as a partner. Adder Mach. Co. v. Ross, 184 Ill. A. 293. (6)

a prima facie case.[44] Proof of actual possession of property makes a prima facie case of title and right to possession,[45] and is presumptive evidence that the possession is rightful.[46] An admission that defendant holds property pursuant to an execution establishes a prima facie case for defendant's right to possession.[47] Proof that property was levied on and sold under a valid execution, issued on a valid judgment, and that defendant became the purchaser, is sufficient to sustain a plea of ownership in himself.[48] In some jurisdictions it is held that a finding in replevin of a general ownership in a party to the action is not sustained by proof of a special interest in the property.[49]

[§ 251] 3. Taking, Detention, and Possession by Defendant. Plaintiff, having the burden of proving a wrongful taking or detention,[50] must do so by a preponderance of the evidence;[51] or, it has been held, by proof of any circumstances which go to satisfy the jury.[52] Thus proof of a demand and refusal,[53] or any circumstances going to show that a demand would have been unavailing, or a refusal to

Title in third person. Marigliano v. O'Connor, 99 NYS 544 (evidence insufficient to show holding by third person under execution); Androvitch v. Fowler, 54 Utah 506, 182 P 222 (evidence of declarations of employee of plaintiff that employee owned property, seized for his debt by defendant constable).

[c] Proof showing a tenancy in common between plaintiff and a third person does not support a plea of property in such third person. Under such a plea, it is incumbent upon defendant to show not only property in a third person, but also that there was no property in plaintiff. Godard v. Tuck, 11 N. B. 370.

[a] Evidence held to make prima facie case.—Evidence showing: (1) Bill of lading for goods shipped. Sanitary Can Co. v. Hines, 149 Ill. A. 244. (2) Bill of sale to plaintiff from owner. Rosenthal v. Rapaport, 115 NYS 1073. (3) Certificates of deposit, indorsed by the payee to plaintiff. Sather v. Sexton, 93 Minn. 480, 101 NW 654. (4) Contract for construction of property by plaintiff, and use by defendant. Charlotte Furnace Co. v. Stouffer, 127 Pa. 336, 17 A 994. (5) Purchase by, delivery to, and control by, plaintiff of property. Lowary v. Tuttle, 36 Ida. 363, 210 P 1006. (6) Manufacture of goods by plaintiff, and shipment to agent through whom defendant claims, for sale. Warder, etc., Co. v. Ingli, 1 S. D. 155, 46 NW 181. (7) Note and mortgage, under which plaintiff claims. National Brewery Co. v. Lindsay, 72 Mo. A. 591. (8) Possession of property by a corporation taking possession of leasehold, where the property was placed therein by lessee under a lease authorizing him to remove it. Churchill v. More, 4 Cal. A. 219, 88 P 290. (9) Purchase by mortgagee at foreclosure sale, and subsequent sale to plaintiff. Sharp v. McBride, 69 Ind. 396. (10) Purchase of notes from one having possession for sale thereof, with redelivery only for purpose of collection. Cooke v. Reserve Realty, etc., Co., (Mo. A.) 25 SW (2d) 562. (11) That, after verdict and judgment for plaintiff in an action for conversion, defendant retained the property under an attachment until it was paid and discharged by plaintiff. Krebs Lith. Co. v. Studor, 7 Oh. Dec. (Reprint) 199, 11 CincLBul 170. (12) Title to land, and that property grew thereon. Oxley Stave Co. v. Staggs, 59 Ark. 370, 37 SW 241; Youmans v. Caldwell, 4 Oh. St. 71. (13) Written document expressly stating title in plaintiff. Govin v. De Miranda, 140 N. Y. 474, 35 NE 626.

Fenton, 13 Wyo. 436, 80 P 823, 110 AmSR 1010. See also Simer v. Hults, 194 Ill. A. 240. But see Killeen v. Greve, 182 Iowa 1382, 166 NW 731 (the presumption of ownership of a colt from its being in the pasture of plaintiff is insufficient to establish the ownership of plaintiff by purchase from defendant as alleged).

[a] Proof of actual possession of land (1) make a prima facie case for plaintiff for property grown thereon. (Webb v. Phillips, 80 Fed. 954, 26 CCA 272), (2) but proof of a short possession, at a remote time, by plaintiff or his predecessor in title, is insufficient for that purpose (Webb v. Phillips, supra).

[b] Possession, coupled with strong proof of ownership, is sufficient as against one who cannot show a superior right. Barkley v. Leiter, 49 Nebr. 123, 68 NW 381.

51. [a] Evidence held sufficient to show wrongful taking or detention.—Nix v. Watts, 121 Ark. 346, 181 SW 127 (evidence that plaintiff's cotton was delivered to and sold by defendant); Drinkhouse v. Van Ness, 202 Cal. 359, 260 P 869 (evidence showing sale of half interest to each of two plaintiffs secretly, retaining possession under plaintiff's mistaken belief that defendant still owned one-half interest, training and handling horse, and taking from plaintiffs after they discovered the deal and took possession); More v. Finger, 58 P 322 [aff 128 Cal. 313, 60 P 933] (evidence showing acquisition by defendants of note from plaintiff's husband while he was intoxicated, and knowledge that the note belonged to plaintiff); Ruzanoff v. Sacramento Retailers Credit Assoc., 97 Cal. A. 682, 276 P 156 (evidence that defendant, who purchased at sheriff's sale, was told of plaintiff's interest); Gross v. Watkins, 11 Colo. 550, 19 P 539 (evidence showing defendant wrongfully took cattle from plaintiff); Dougherty v. Bliss, 244 Ill. A. 282 (evidence showing purchase of negative, thereby showing ownership); Dugan v. Nichols, 125 Mass. 576 (testimony of defendant that even if demanded he would not have given up the property after being told it belonged to plaintiff); Goodell v. Ward, 17 Minn. 17 (that property was in a public street, in front of plaintiff's house, and defendant took it and refused to give it up); Viviano v. Columbia Can Co., 183 Mo. A. 281, 166 SW 1082 (letters of defendant indicating that plaintiff owned property; wrongful charges by defendant); Knapp v. Mahurin, 72 N. H. 595, 56 A 315; Oyler v. Dautoff, 36 Or. 357, 59 P 474 (evidence showing possession by defendant and refusal to surrender property upon demand and tender of amount due thereon); Deal v. Potter, 26 U. C. Q. B. (Ont.) 578 (evidence of acts and declarations showing taking, and detention jointly). See Haller v. Hopkins, 195 Ill. A. 380.

[b] Evidence held insufficient to show wrongful detention.—Grossman v. Yip Wing, 62 Cal. A. 121, 216 P 634 (evidence that defendants were in possession of land before plaintiff ordered them off without laying claim to ownership of the land, in replevin for crops); Wooley v. Williams, 105 Conn. 671, 136 A 583 (evidence of taking is insufficient to show that officer assumed control of records by virtue of a writ of replevin covering a grafanola, where he might have been justified under the contract); Brand v. Hedwick, 43 Kan. 131, 23 P 111 (evidence showing control of property by plaintiff and no interference therewith); Preziaso v. Union City Cleaning, etc., Co., 6 N. J. Misc. 171, 140 A 394 (defendant's refusal to return a coat is sufficiently shown by the return of a coat other than the one delivered); Howe Sewing Mach. Co. v. Haupt, 7 Daly (N. Y.) 108 (evidence of conversations in which demand was made, but no refusal); Welton v. Holmes, 6 NYSt 546 (evidence that plaintiff took for another, and had no possession except while moving the property).

[c] Prima facie evidence.—Upon the plea of non cepit proof that defendant had the goods at the place alleged is prima facie sufficient to entitle plaintiff to recover. McLeod v. McMillan, 5 N. B. 64.

[d] Conclusive evidence.—Return of writ by defendant marshal is conclusive proof of the caption. De Wolf v. Harris, 8 F. Cas. No. 4,221, 4 Mason 515 [aff 4 Pet. 147, 7 L. ed. 811].

[e] Evidence sufficient to show place of taking.—Evidence showing taking in street in front of plaintiff's house is sufficient to sustain an allegation of taking from the house of plaintiff in that street. Faget v. Brayton, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 350.

[f] Evidence sufficient to show place of detention.—The place where the property is detained need not be proved by direct evidence, but it may be inferred from other circumstances appearing in evidence. Louthain v. May, 77 Ind. 109.

52. Cranz v. Kroger, 22 Ill. 74.

53. Cranz v. Kroger, supra; Kelly v. Burchfield, 27 Kan. 700.

listen to a demand,[54] would be sufficient. It has been held that in an action of replevin in the detinet alone, the same proof of demand and refusal is required as in an action of trover and conversion,[55] although it has been held that the proof of refusal need not be as strong in replevin as in trover.[56] An officer's return showing seizure of the property is prima facie evidence of the seizure.[57] It has been held that any evidence showing that defendant obtained possession from one who had no authority to give that possession is sufficient to show an unlawful taking.[58] As it is necessary that defendant have actual or constructive possession of the property at the time the action was commenced,[59] such possession must be established by a preponderance of the evidence.[60] A defendant seeking to justify his taking or detention must sustain his defense by a preponderance of the evidence.[61] It has been held unnecessary for an officer to produce in evidence the judgment on which the execution, under which he took the property, was founded.[62] Prima facie evidence of the officer's right to hold office is sufficient in the absence of contrary evidence.[63] The burden of proving that the taking was not for taxes, fines, or on judicial process is amply discharged by evidence showing how defendant obtained the property.[64] An affidavit so reciting is not conclusive of the fact that the property was not taken for a tax, when the facts on the trial show otherwise.[65]

[§ 252] 4. Identity of Property. Where the burden is on plaintiff to establish the identity of the property[66] he must do so by a preponderance of the evidence.[67]

Scott, 142 Ark. 372, 219 SW 322 (letter showing defendant's refusal to deliver, and claimed property); General Motors Acceptance Corp. v. Littlefield, etc., Co., 128 Me. 388, 147 A 868 (evidence that sheriff first demanded the property and waited for a refusal before serving the writ); Caldwell v. Bruggerman, 8 Minn. 286 (evidence from which the jury might infer demand and refusal); Taylor v. Embury, 187 NYS 138 (evidence that plaintiff, farming on shares, asked for his share of cut hay, and was refused). See also Machelli v. Torrelli, 190 Ill. A. 287.

[b] Evidence held insufficient to show demand and refusal.—Detroit Safe Co. v. Myer, 192 Mich. 215, 158 NW 860 (no evidence showing that the person whom plaintiff talked to had any interest in the property or any control as agent or representative); Jumiska v. Andrews, 87 Minn. 515, 92 NW 470 (evidence that plaintiff talked to agent of defendants).

[60] [a] Evidence held sufficient to show possession.—(1) An affidavit that property was detained by one defendant is evidence that plaintiff did not know he had transferred it to another person. Anderson v. Boneman, 199 Mich. 532, 165 NW 830. (2) Defendant's testimony that he could return property, and other statements. Maloney v. Neville, 128 Mo. A. 616, 107 SW 4. (3) Evidence showing that defendant was sheriff and through his deputy took and controlled property. Crum v. Elliston, 33 Mo. A. 591. (4) Evidence showing service of summons on defendant prior to his selling the property. Longerbeam v. Huston, 20 S. D. 254, 105 NW 743. (5) Seizure under attachment, and exercise of control over property, and refusal to deliver up on demand. Aman v. Mottweiler, 15 Ind. A. 405, 44 NE 63. (6) That when replevined the wagon was standing where it was left two days previous, without change in its location. Kimble v. McDermott, 154 Mo. A. 209, 134 SW 72.

[b] Evidence held insufficient to show possession.—(1) That property was seen in defendant's possession "probably a month before this suit was instituted." Leisey Brewing Co. v. Cline, (Mo. A.) 211 SW 689. (2) Redelivery bond. Jetton v. Smead, 29 Ark. 372.

[c] Prima facie evidence.—(1) Testimony that defendant took possession of the goods at a date previous to the institution of the suit, and that he still has possession of the goods. Rabenort v. Frazier, (Mo. A.) 238 SW 550. (2) Evidence showing that defendant claimed land and personalty, ordered plaintiff off land, and prevented use of personalty, made a prima facie case of possession, although plaintiff was on the land whereon the personalty was located when the action was commenced. Hayes v. Moffatt, 83 Mont. 185, 271 P 452. (3) In view of the rule making admissions of defendants, that they had the property in question on the day before suit was brought and on the day of bringing suit, but before it was brought, evidence of such possession during the day suit was brought, and Rev. Codes § 7962 subd 20, making it a disputable presumption that the ordinary course of business has been followed, the admissions were prima facie evidence of the present actual possession by defendants when the action was commenced. Sullivan v. Girson, 39 Mont. 274, 102 P 320.

[61] Fon v. Chambers, 68 Cal. A. 244, 228 P 865.

[a] Evidence held sufficient.—Baldwin v. Scott, 65 Colo. 53, 173 P 716 (evidence of third person's control over property sufficient to justify assumption that it was his); Truitt v. Revell, 4 Del. 71 (original execution, or a copy thereof, is sufficient evidence of taking under execution); Sattley Co. v. Hansen, 84 Nebr. 525, 121 NW 573 (that defendant was an innocent purchaser of the property for a valuable consideration).

[b] Evidence held insufficient.—(1) To show a right to detain. Lester v. Columbia Storage Warehouses, 130 App. Div. 551, 115 NYS 61. (2) To sustain defense that goods replevied were in the custody of the law. Reeside v. Fischer, 2 Harr. & G. (Md.) 320 (evidence of taking under fieri facias, but no evidence as to the time of seizure, or whether defendant still held under writ).

[c] Preponderance of evidence sufficient.—An action of claim and delivery for leaflets seized by police officers as intended to be used in a Chinese lottery, is a civil case in which the issues are determined according to the preponderance of evidence, and is not criminal and does not require proof beyond a reasonable doubt that the papers were in fact blank lottery tickets. Fon v. Chambers, 68 Cal. A. 244, 228 P 865.

[67] [a] Evidence held sufficiently to identify property.—Alexander v. Martz, (Cal. A.) 290 P 300 (evidence of registration, alteration of numbers, etc.); Reed v. Olson, 83 Colo. 595, 267 P 610 (statements as to purchase of diamonds from deceased, although disbelieved, were sufficient to show identity); Crowley v. Shepard, 38 Colo. 345, 88 P 177 (evidence describing mare as to color, markings, and brand); Gunn v. Williams, 246 Ill. A. 494 (evidence that plaintiff saw his car in defendant's possession is prima facie sufficient on identity); Kee, etc., Dairy Co. v. Pennsylvania Co., 214 Ill. A. 1 [aff 291 Ill. 248, 126 NE 179] (milk bottles are sufficiently identified by evidence that bottles marked with plaintiff's name as were those taken on the writ were manufactured for the plaintiff, and that plaintiff had never parted with title to them); Wald v. Auto Salvage, etc., Co., 190 Iowa 11, 179 NW 856 (evidence describing marks, scratches, and peculiarities of parts of car); Cohen v.

[§ 253] 5. Value and Damages. Where recovery of the value of the property is sought, the value of the property must be established by sufficient evidence.[68] The value found by appraisers appointed by the sheriff when he levied attachments on the property is prima facie evidence of the value as against the sheriff.[69] Where the statutes so provide[70] a levying officer's valuation is prima facie evidence of the value of the property.[71] Plaintiff's affidavit, made in suing out the writ, has been held not conclusive evidence of the value as against plaintiff,[72] although it has been held that such allegations will be taken as true in the absence of evidence of a different value.[73] Allegations of value in the writ are not conclusive evidence of the value.[74] Where plaintiff seeks damages for a wrongful taking or detention he must establish his right by a preponderance of the evidence;[75] and so also must defendant, who wishes to recover for the detention of the property under the writ of replevin.[76] To support a ver-

Seashore, 159 Minn. 345, 198 NW 1009 (identity of stolen jewels by size and appearance, and by settings); Graves v. Dudley, 20 N. Y. 76 (proof that part of the bills are of a certain bank and denomination is prima facie sufficient, in the absence of evidence that the bank had ever issued any others of the same denomination or that defendant had in his possession any other bills of similar denomination upon that bank); Simers v. Kellogg, 178 App. Div. 881, 164 NYS 161 (evidence that property was in transit to defendant, who agreed to turn it over to plaintiff, and that goods were the only ones in transit); Hall v. Collier, (Tex. Civ. A.) 200 SW 880 (testimony as to imperfection in jewel); California Ins. Co. v. Aplin, 117 Wash. 159, 200 P 1079 (serial numbers on car); Murray v. Norwood, 77 Wis. 405, 46 NW 499 (evidence of numbers on bonds and bank bills).

[b] Evidence held insufficient to identify property.—Petey Mfg. Co. v. Morris, 119 Md. 91, 84 A 238, 47 LRANS 882 (testimony of witness as to logs); Brunson v. Volunteer Carriage Co., 93 Miss. 793, 47 S 377 (evidence showing note under which plaintiff claims his right to possession was not for property sued); Meyer v. Smith, 148 App. Div. 840, 133 NYS 531 (evidence showing pearl as property of defendant, against plaintiff's claim that the pearl could not be identified); Biegeleisen v. Cohen, 192 NYS 321 (identity of ring); Ehrman v. Simpson, 110 NYS 481 (evidence showing different setting and stone in ring replevied and the one stolen, and no evidence of any identifying marks); Sapp v. Hartford F. & M. Ins. Co., 86 Okl. 87, 206 P 814 (no evidence showing change of motor number, where plaintiff's car bore a different number from the one replevied).

68. [a] Evidence held sufficient on which to fix value. Bridgeman v. Augusta Cooperage Co., 147 Ark. 378, 227 SW 602 (evidence of feet of lumber and value thereof, and cost of hauling); Hall v. Benton, 160 Ark. 254, 254 SW 530 (evidence of sale of hogs for ten dollars); Gunter v. Williams, 137 Ark. 530, 210 SW 136 (testimony of defendant that he could have sold the tank for one hundred and fifty or two hundred dollars was sufficient to warrant a finding that the value of the tank was one hundred and seventy-five dollars); Roberts v. Burr, 135 Cal. 156, 67 P 46 (evidence of two witnesses that the goods were worth four thousand five hundred and thirty-seven dollars, to some extent corroborated by a third witness, although there was evidence introduced by defendant tending to show that the goods were of a less value); Seligman v. Armando, 94 Cal. 314, 29 P 710 (evidence of original value, value of goods sold, and amount paid by defendant); Black v. Black, 74 Cal. 520, 16 P 311 (undisputed testimony of one witness); Lundblade v. Pierce, 95 Cal. A. 192, 272 P 329 (evidence showing that at the time defendants took possession, the automobile was worth four hundred and thirty-two dollars market value); Brunswick-Balke-Collender Co. v. Witt, 112 Kan. 82, 209 P 815 (price at which property sold a short time before the suit, and the amount then paid and the amount due); Eichorn v. Schochie, 154 Minn. 261, 191 NW 737 (admissions in pleadings, and evidence); Brunke v. Salinger, (Mo. A.) 8 SW (2d) 88 (evidence of value at the time of taking, and no evidence to show depreciation from then to the time of trial); Feil v. Wells, (Mo. A.) 268 SW 893 (evidence that face value of bonds was three hundred dollars and defendant had offered to return the bonds or three hundred dollars on certain conditions); Reynolds v. Hanson, (Mo. A.) 199 SW 279 (evidence of the purchase price, and time the property was used, the rental value, and the appraised value on the death of the supposed owner); Davenport v. Abbott, (Tex. Civ. A.) 28 SW 218 (evidence of weight of diamond, and testimony as to value of diamonds as determined by weight); Spencer v. Summerhays, (Utah) 280 P 720 (testimony showing that wool was worth thirty cents per pound); Babare v. Rodman, 127 Wash. 436, 221 P 292 (admission of value higher than that assessed by jury, and time net was taken).

[b] Evidence held insufficient to warrant finding of value. Day v. Ferguson, 74 Ark. 298, 85 SW 771 (no evidence as to value of certain items); National Cash Register Co. v. Agne, 43 App. Div. 605, 60 NYS 348 (evidence of purchase price); Ehrenreich v. Knudsen, 157 NYS 1082 (evidence of value of several articles, some of which were not delivered to defendant); Gross v. Lincoln, 81 Okl. 87, 196 P 960 (allegations of value or damages not being considered true by failure to controvert them); Gregory v. Newsom, (Tex. Civ. A.) 279 SW 912 (plaintiff's evidence of price at which he would sell, and price defendant paid a third person claiming as owner); Adler, etc., Clothing Co. v. Thorp, 102 Wis. 70, 78 NW 184 (evidence not showing decrease in value, on directed verdict for plaintiff).

[c] Submission of question to jury.—In replevin for a piano sold to defendant on credit, evidence of the amount it was sold for, and that it had since been damaged in a certain amount, is sufficient to authorize the court in submitting the question of value to the jury. Story, etc., Piano Co. v. Gibbons, 96 Mo. A. 218, 70 SW 168.

75. Lumsden v. Howard, 210 Mo. A. 645, 236 SW 420.

[a] Evidence held sufficient.—(1) To sustain finding of damages for wrongful detention. Lundblade v. Pierce, 95 Cal. A. 192, 272 P 329; Bonestell v. Western Auto-Motive Finance Corp., 69 Cal. A. 719, 232 P 734; Wellman v. Forster, 46 Cal. A. 359, 189 P 128; Lacquement v. Bellamy, (Mo. A.) 253 SW 1076. (2) To sustain award of punitive damages. Manley v. Bailey, 151 S. C. 366, 149 SE 119 (evidence showing willful refusal to return property to plaintiff after notice).

[b] Evidence held insufficient.—Wheeler v. Kassabaum, 76 Cal. 90, 18 P 119 (sole evidence being testimony of plaintiff); Aultman v. Richardson, 21 Ind. A. 211, 52 NE 86 (mere evidence of breach of warranty, without damage); Muzenich v. McCain, (Mo. A.) 274 SW 888; Webb v. Warren, 129 Okl. 151, 264 P 180 (evidence not showing owner of premises was party to contract of rental of furniture, or authorized others to make contract); Hunt v. Cohen, 74 Okl. 248, 179 P 1; Duroth Mfg. Co. v. Cauffiel, 243 Pa. 24, 89 A 798; Shieder v. Southern R. Co., 83 S. C. 455, 65 SE 631 (where there was no evidence reasonably tending to show that defendant wantonly disregarded any right of plaintiff, punitive damages are not recoverable); Oliver v. Morris, 125 Wash. 561, 216 P 846 (no evidence of any damage).

[c] Evidence held sufficient to preclude plaintiff from damages for taking.—Martin v. Feigenberg, 203 Cal. 347, 264 P 477 (evidence of conduct and acquiescence in taking after sale, no objection to sale, and actually helping defendant to take by assisting in loading property).

76. [a] Evidence held sufficient.—Ætna Ins. Co. v. Mills, 176 Ark. 684, 3 SW (2d) 999 (testimony of defendant as to purpose for which he used property, and testimony of witnesses as to its value per day for such use); Lake Mills Farmers' State Bank v. Hammond, 170 Minn. 313, 212 NW 593 (evidence that sheriff took property under attachment, leaving it in custody for him, and later, having received a writ of replevin, refused to part with it even after attachment was released); Edwards v. Eveler, 84 Mo. A. 405 (testimony of defendant as to damages); Shawnee Nat. Bank v. Perry, 136 Okl. 60, 276 P 230 (evidence showing seizure of property under writ in accordance with a plan of persecution).

[b] Evidence held insufficient.—Hammond v. Thompson, 54 Mont. 609, 173 P 229 (evidence of gross receipts and profits of hotel and saloon, property seized being only a portion of the furnishings); Roth v. Yara, 19 N. M. 8, 140 P 1071 (only evidence was defendant's own testimony);

dict for damages for detention, it is essential that there should be proof that such damages were in fact sustained.[77]

[§ 254] 6. Fraud. Where plaintiff seeks to recover property on the ground that it was secured from him by fraud, he must establish this by full, clear, and satisfactory evidence,[78] and where defendant relies upon fraud as a defense, he must prove it by evidence showing more than a mere suspicion of fraud.[79]

XIV. TRIAL, JUDGMENT,[80] ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENT, AND REVIEW*

[§ 255] A. Dismissal and Nonsuit[81]—1. Voluntary[82]—a. Where Plaintiff Obtains Possession of Property—(1) In General. In an action of replevin both parties are regarded as equally actors;[83] and, where plaintiff in replevin has been put in possession of property under his writ, he cannot be permitted to escape liability to defendant by suffering a nonsuit or dismissing his action,[84] except with the consent of the latter.[85] Such consent must be actual, not constructive,[86] and, if made by an agent of defendant without special authority therefor,[87] or by one of several defendants having interests adverse to the others,[88] is not sufficient. But an order of dismissal of an action of replevin against a constable

[a] Rule applied.—A plaintiff, who seeks to recover on the ground of conspiracy between defendant and intervener, has the burden of establishing by full, clear, and satisfactory evidence that defendant and intervener had combined to do an unlawful thing, or to do a lawful thing in an unlawful manner, and that each had the intent to defraud and understood the other had such intent. Quinlan v. Rundle, 273 Pa. 479, 117 A 208.

[b] Evidence held sufficient.—Crawford v. Hurd, 106 SW 849, 32 KyL 636 (fraudulent representations of title of defendant to secure possession of plaintiff's goods in exchange for a lot).

[c] Evidence held insufficient.—Jumiska v. Andrews, 87 Minn. 515, 92 NW 470 (evidence that plaintiff signed a mortgage without reading it); Heyward v. Maynard, 119 App. Div. 66, 103 NYS 1028 (in securing possession of securities).

levying upon personal property will not be set aside on the mere ground that a stipulation for such dismissal signed by the constable was not signed or consented to by the execution plaintiff, where no application was made to substitute him in the action as defendant in lieu of the constable.[89] After the property has been seized and delivered to plaintiff defendant becomes the virtual plaintiff in the case.[90] Plaintiff cannot and does not thereby deprive defendant of his right to establish his title and right to possession, and obtain a judgment for the return of the property or its value,[91] and damages for the taking and withholding of the property.[92] If the rule were otherwise plaintiff, under color of legal process, would perpetrate a fraud on the law and be allowed to keep property, the title to which was prima facie in defendant from whom it was taken at the beginning of the suit.[93]

[a] Full value of property.—(1) If defendant is found entitled to return of the property, he is also entitled to judgment for its whole value if return cannot be had. Lake v. (2) Where plaintiff is a stranger to the title and defendant has only a special interest the entire value may be recovered by the special owner, who is answerable to the general owner for any interest remaining after the special claim is satisfied. Enfield v. Stewart, 24 N. M. 472, 174 P 428.

[b] Time within which right ex-

ue of the property, if his, taken from him by the writ.[97] The judgment, it has been held, should be in the alternative—for the specific property if it can be had and if not for their value as assessed by the jury.[98] However, in some jurisdictions judgment on a discontinuance of replevin is for costs only, and not for a return, the remedy by action on the bond being held exclusive.[99] If the action is brought to recover property from an officer who had attached it, and the claim of plaintiff in attachment was satisfied before the return day in the attachment suit, and on that day the suit was entered, settled, and discontinued, defendant in replevin is not entitled to a return of the property attached, regardless of its ownership or attachability.[1–21]

[§ 257] b. Where Property Not Taken under Writ, or Returned to Defendant. It has been held that the action may be dismissed if the property has not been taken under the writ,[22] or if taken has been returned to defendant on the failure of plaintiff to furnish the requisite bond,[23] or on restoration of the property to defendant on his giving the requisite bond.[24] But in such case plaintiff cannot deprive defendant of his right to have the question of his damages and costs passed upon,[25] although defendant cannot recover damages to the extent of the value of the goods.[26]

[§ 258] 2. Involuntary—a. Grounds—(1) Want of Prosecution. The common-law rule is that in replevin defendant cannot move for judgment as in case of nonsuit for failure of plaintiff to proceed to trial,[27] both parties being regarded as actors in such action and either having the right to bring the case to trial.[28] Now, however, in some jurisdictions, actions of replevin present no exception to the general rule authorizing nonsuit or dismissal for failure to prosecute actions.[29] So the failure to file a declaration or complaint, when not taken advantage of at the proper time,[30] has been held to authorize a dismissal;[31] but although, upon failure to file a declaration in the time prescribed by statute, a judgment of discontinuance, but not a nonsuit, has been held proper,[32] it has been held that the failure to file a declaration at the first term is no cause for discontinuance,[33] although, if not filed ten days before the second term of the court, defendant is entitled to judgment as in case of a nonsuit.[34]

[a] Proper time is before or at the term next after such failure, and if the parties do not do so they cannot afterward have judgment of non prosequi unless they rule plaintiff to plead. Joseph Marrone Contracting Co. v. Monahan, 88 N. J. L. 238, 95 A 984.

[a] In Pennsylvania the act of April 19, 1901, which provides for a judgment of non prosequi when plaintiff has failed to file a declaration after a rule taken, superseded and did away with a rule of court which provided that a judgment of non prosequi could be entered as of course if no declaration was filed within a year. Lackawanna Lumber Co. v. McCormick, 28 Pa. Co. 398.

Intervener. A non prosequi on the ground that plaintiff has not filed his writ and complaint in time cannot be granted on the motion of a party who, by reason of his interest, was admitted as a party defendant at the time of the hearing of the motion.[35]

[§ 259] (2) Failure To Give Bond, or Defective Bond. Failure to give a replevin bond within the time designated by the court,[36] or within a reasonable time after seizure of the property under the writ,[37] or the failure of a nonresident plaintiff to give a bond for costs,[38] has been held sufficient ground in some jurisdictions for a dismissal of the action. And in some jurisdictions the failure to comply with an order of court to furnish an additional bond,[39] or the filing of a defective bond,[40] where the motion to dismiss has been made at the proper time,[41] is sufficient ground for dismissal. But if plaintiff is ready and willing to give a new bond the action should not be dismissed for insufficiency of the bond.[42] Also where the action can be prosecuted without a bond,[43] the fact that a bond given is insufficient,[44] or that plaintiff is unable to give bond,[45] furnishes no ground for the dismissal of the action, but at most for an order that the property be restored to defendant, leaving the issues of wrongful detention and damages sustained thereby to be tried. Where the property is not delivered to plaintiff, it is of course no ground to dismiss that the bond is inoperative, because defendant is not entitled to a bond.[46]

[§ 260] (3) Failure or Insufficiency of Evidence. Where the evidence introduced by plaintiff shows that he is not entitled to recover,[47] or plaintiff fails to make out a prima facie case,[48] or his witnesses are impeached so that their testimony may be disregarded,[49] or the evidence shows a cause other than that charged,[50] a judgment of nonsuit may be entered on defendant's motion. It is otherwise, however, if a prima facie case has been made out, no matter how insufficient, conflicting, and unsatisfactory the testimony may be,[51] or if defendant, by his pleadings and evidence, establishes his own liabili-

[b] Defendant's motion for nonsuit (1) sustained where the evidence showed the appointment under which plaintiff claimed title to the property to be void (Stout v. ty,[52] or transforms the identity of the original action by tendering new issues to which a replication is filed, even though there is no evidence to sustain the original action of replevin.[53] When there is any competent, pertinent and relevant testimony offered to the facts in dispute, the case passes into the hands of the jury, and beyond the judge.[54] So if the evidence shows that plaintiffs are entitled to recover a part of the property sued for and that they are not entitled to recover the balance,[55] or if a case is made out as to one only of several defendants,[56] there is no ground for nonsuit.

[§ 261] (4) Miscellaneous. It is a good ground for dismissal that the pleadings show on their face that the action cannot be sustained,[57] or that the plaintiff's affidavit is defective and insufficient;[58] but in jurisdictions where ultimate delivery is claimed by the complaint and immediate delivery by affidavit, a motion to set aside the proceedings because the complaint does not state a cause of action cannot, so far as the claim to immediate delivery is concerned, be sustained.[59] Where plaintiff upon the court's order to so do, fails to return the goods to defendant who had been holding them under a writ of attachment, the court may properly dismiss the replevin action.[60] It is not a ground for dismissal that plaintiff failed to prove the value of the goods, it being shown that he was entitled to them;[61] that the money paid by plaintiff for the property was not her own;[62] that the officer who seized the property neglected to allow defendant an opportunity to execute a bond and retain the property;[63] that the sheriff failed to file plaintiff's papers within the time required by statute where defendant was not injured by the delay;[64] that the service of the writ was irregular in that the officer, without being directed to do so in writing by plaintiff or his attorney, did not take the goods into his possession;[65] that, of two spans of mules replevied, the sheriff seized one team in the county in which the action was brought, and the other team in another county to which it had been brought after the commencement of the action;[66] that defendant disclaims title to the property;[67] that two animals included in the writ were appraised at one sum in the appraiser's certificate;[68] that an animal described in the writ as a heifer is described in the certificate of appraisement as a cow;[69] that plaintiff as executor has commenced an action against defendant and his officer for the conversion of the replevied property if it does not appear that the conversion relied on was the same act for which the replevin was brought;[70] or that plaintiff has caused the officer, to whom the writ was committed, to bring an action against defendant and another officer for taking the replevied property out of his hands, before its delivery to plaintiff.[71] It has been held that the dismissal of a writ of replevin on motion based on affidavits, on the grounds that defendant was a deputy sheriff and the writ was directed to the sheriff and served by another deputy, that the writ was issued without authority of law, and that the service was unlawful and irregular and gave the court no jurisdiction, is error.[72] Where the action was dismissed for want of jurisdiction, on appeal, in determining whether a want of jurisdiction was shown plaintiff's motion for a new trial alleging that the property had been seized on a void execution and judgment, would tend, if considered at all, to show that the motion to dismiss should have been denied.[73]

[§ 262] b. Proceedings To Dismiss.[74] In proceedings to dismiss the action, the statutory requirements must be strictly followed, and the motion therefor must contain all the requisites necessary to justify the court in granting such motion.[75]

Waiver of motion. A motion to dismiss an action of replevin for want of a sufficient replevin bond is not waived by subsequently, and before the motion has been decided, filing an affidavit of defense and an answer to the merits.[76]

Right to appear to move for dismissal. After his property has been taken on a writ of replevin, defendant is not bound to wait until he is served with summons before appearing, but has a right to appear immediately and move for a discontinuance.[77]

[§ 263] c. Character of Judgment Rendered—(1) General Rule. A judgment of nonsuit is a judgment for defendant[78] and entitles him to the full benefit of statutory provisions relative to a judgment for defendant.[79] On a judgment of involuntary dismissal or nonsuit, defendant is ordinarily entitled to a judgment for the return of the property,[80] or for its value in case it cannot be returned;[81]

"In all cases of abatement or nonsuit in replevin except where non cepit alone is pleaded, the order for return goes as a matter of course, and becomes a part of the judgment to be formulated by the clerk without further order." Bettinson v. Lowery, 86 Me. 218, 224, 29 A 1003.

"This must be so, or the plaintiff, by putting in an insufficient affidavit and bond, might obtain possession of the property, accomplish the object of his suit, and perhaps leave the defendant remediless, or if not entirely remediless, he would entail upon him a long and tedious litigation to obtain the possession of his property, of which he had been wrongfully dispossessed, through the instrumentality of the law, or the value thereof." Branch v. Branch, 5 Fla. 447, 451.

[a] Rule not unconditional.—Statutes requiring a return of the property in all cases of nonsuit are not unconditional, but are subject to the proviso that if plaintiff, between the time of the commencement of the suit and suffering nonsuit, shall become entitled to the possession of the property, judgment may be given against him for costs and such damages as defendant shall have sustained. Lane v. Kohn, 79 Ill. A. 396.

[b] Right depends not on defendant's proof of title to the property, but upon his obtaining a judgment in his favor and upon having made a claim for return of the property. Skaggs v. Taylor, 77 Cal. A. 519, 247 P 218.

[c] On failure to establish case.—Where no evidence was introduced the return of the property and the award of costs follow as incidents of plaintiff's failure to establish his case. Barrett v. Shipley, 63 Mont. 152, 206 P 430.

[e] Where the property is in the hands of the officer executing the writ, on dismissal of the suit for want of a proper bond, defendant is entitled to an order that the officer return the property to defendant at the place where he took it. Thurber v. Richmond, 46 Vt. 395.

[g] Form of judgment.—(1) A judgment of dismissal for want of prosecution that defendant have a writ of retorno habendo and not that the property be returned, while informal, is not so defective as to be a nullity. Luthy v. Kline, 56 Ill. A. 314; McCrory v. Hamilton, 39 Ill. A. 490; Fowler v. Richardson, 32 Ill. A. 252. (2) It has been held that a judgment that plaintiff take nothing by his writ, and that defendant have a return of the property so replevied as aforesaid is substantially, although not formally, correct. [a] Rule applies upon dismissal for want of prosecution. Sullivan v. Martinelli, 261 Mass. 261, 158 NE 662.

[b] Alternative judgment.—(1) Defendant is entitled to an alternative judgment for the return of the property, or for its value if a return cannot be had. Hanson v. Egan, 228 Ill. A. 329; Pabst Brewing Co. v. Butchart, 68 Minn. 303, 71 NW 273. (2) If return cannot be had, judgment need not be in alternative, but may properly be for its value alone. Skaggs v. Taylor, 77 Cal. A. 519, 247 P 218.

and by some statutes it is expressly provided that, where defendant is entitled to return of the property, he may instead of taking judgment for a return of the property take judgment for the value of the property.[82] However, in some jurisdictions, although where plaintiff's case fails because of his failure to introduce any evidence defendant is entitled to a judgment for the return of the property,[83] he is not entitled to an alternative judgment for the value thereof.[84] If the court disregards the uncontradicted testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses because it has been impeached and dismisses the complaint, judgment on the merits cannot be awarded.[85]

[§ 264] (2) On Dismissal for Want of Jurisdiction. As a general rule, if the action is dismissed for want of jurisdiction of the subject matter of the suit, the rule stated above[86] has no application, and the court is without power to order a return of the property,[87] or a judgment for its value.[88] However, it has been held that where the court does not have jurisdiction of defendant or of the property, it may properly order it returned to defendant and upon failure to do so award execution for its value;[89] but it cannot render an absolute and unqualified judgment and direct execution to issue for the value of defendant's interest in the property.[90] And where the action was dismissed simply for want of jurisdiction it has been held that defendant is entitled to an alternative judgment for the return of the property or payment of its value.[91]

[§ 265] (3) Want of, or Insufficient, Service. Where service is set aside after the return-day, there can be no new service, and it operates as a discontinuance; and a defendant whose property has been taken may have a return or waive it and require an assessment of damages.[92] But it has been held that no judgment for return can be given if the writ is abated on defendant's motion for want of service on him,[93] or where the replevin bond being defective the writ has not been served by the officer nor returned to the court issuing the writ.[94]

[§ 266] (4) As Affected by Defendant's Plead-

special interest.—Where plaintiff is nonsuited because his evidence shows that defendant is entitled to possession as plaintiff's bailee, the court should assess and enter in the alternative judgment the value of defendant's special interest only and not the value of the whole property. Gaynor v. Blewitt, 69 Wis. 582, 34 NW 725.

[d] Time of election to take value.—(1) If after plaintiffs have sold the goods replevied beyond the jurisdiction of the court, they submit to a nonsuit, on proceedings at a subsequent term to assess damages, defendant's election to take the value of the goods made after the jury was sworn is in due time. Brown v. Horning, 76 Mich. 542, 43 NW 453. (2) Defendant is not required to file a written waiver of return, and elect to take judgment for the value of the property, before trial, but may do so at the trial without any formal entry or writing beyond a proper recital in the judgment. Brown v. Horning, supra.

[e] In justice's court waiver of the return, entered at defendant's request in open court, by the justice, authorizes judgment for value instead of for return. Humphrey v. Bayn, 45 Mich. 565, 8 NW 556.

But see Horowitz v. Decker, 88 NYS 217 (holding that, where replevin was erroneously brought in the municipal court to recover chattels mortgaged to secure the purchase price on an alleged breach of condition, and, after an attempted amendment of the summons so as to change the action to one to foreclose a lien, an inquest was taken, without an attachment of the property, an order entered directing a sale of the chattels "replevied at the commencement of the action" was erroneous, since the replevied chattels had been taken without jurisdiction, and they should be returned to defendant).

[a] Rule applies where the value of the property is below the jurisdictional amount. Burdett v. Doty, 38 Fed. 491; Gray v. Dean, 136 Mass. 128; Widber v. Benjamin, 75 Vt. 152, 53 A 1071.

[b] What not want of jurisdiction of subject matter.—An action of replevin was brought in a county where one of the parties resided, but not the county where the property replevied was detained, and for this reason the action was dismissed on motion. It was held that, notwithstanding this disposition of the cause, the court had jurisdiction, and it was its duty, to render a judgment for a return to defendant of the property replevied, without any proof of his right to have the property restored, and without any formal plea or avowry by defendant; and that plaintiff had no right to contest such a judgment on the ground that he owned the property. Collamer v. Page, 35 Vt. 387.

[c] In Connecticut (1) a motion to erase is the only remedy for securing the dismissal of an action for want of jurisdiction apparent on the face of the pleadings. Galvin v. Birch, 97 Conn. 399, 118 A 826. (2) In such case, upon dismissal of the action, the court has no further jurisdiction over the case and defendant cannot, by an answer in the nature of an avowry and counterclaim after nonsuit, obtain a judgment for the return of the property and damages. [a] Application of statute.—A statute providing that the person found to be entitled to the possession of property replevied may, at his option, have execution for its specific delivery or its value applies only to a case where the court has jurisdiction and power to determine on the merits who is entitled to the possession of the property in controversy. ings or Absence of Pleadings. Where defendant obtains a judgment of dismissal or nonsuit on failure of plaintiff's evidence to make out his case, he is not entitled to a judgment for a return of the property or its value, unless his pleadings would entitle him to such judgment.[95] He is not entitled to such judgment on a plea of non cepit or non detinet.[96] Nor, in some jurisdictions, is he entitled to a judgment for return of the property or its value where there is no prayer, claim, or demand of any kind in the answer for a return of the property or its value.[97] But if defendant in his pleading makes a claim for the return of the property or its value he is entitled to such a judgment when plaintiff is nonsuited.[98] Also, where, defendant obtains a judgment of dismissal or nonsuit before pleading, he is entitled to a return of the goods.[99] Thus it has been held that an avowry is not necessary to authorize the court to render a judgment for return of the goods where the writ is abated for irregularity in the replevin process.[1]

[§ 267] (5) Miscellaneous. Defendant is not entitled to a return of the property where the complaint is dismissed on defendant's showing no right of property or possession in himself and alleging possession in another;[2] where plaintiff is nonsuited on the ground that the goods had never been in defendant's possession;[3] or where it appears, on dismissal of the suit, that plaintiff never obtained possession of the property under the writ.[4] Also it has been held that no judgment for return can be given if the writ is abated on account of variance between the writ and the declaration,[5] or where the action is dismissed because the writ is void.[6]

[§ 268] d. Operation and Effect of Judgment. A judgment of dismissal or nonsuit for return of the property where not on the merits is not conclusive of defendant's ownership or right of possession.[7] Plaintiff's case is left as it was when he instituted his action,[8] and he may bring another action of replevin for the same property.[9]

[§ 269] e. Assessment of Value. The method of assessing the value of the property is a matter of statutory regulation,[10] the mode of which varies widely in the different jurisdictions.[11]

Capital Lumbering Co. v. Hall, 10 Or. 202, 205. [b] General rule is that, whenever upon the pleadings it appears that a defendant is so entitled, he will have judgment for restoration; otherwise he will not. Millett v. Soule, 125 Me. 188, 132 A 216.

[c] At common law, when the writ was abated or quashed on the plea or motion of defendant, he was entitled to a judgment for the return of the property only when he avowed, made conusance, or put in a plea showing that he was entitled to possession. Gould v. Barnard, 3 Mass. 199.

C. 438 (where it was held, under a statute providing that, when the property shall have been delivered to a plaintiff and he shall fail to return by being nonsuited, there shall be an inquiry of the value of the property and of the damage by his detention, that a nonsuit is conclusive at least to the extent of defendant's right to a return of the property and to damages during the pendency of the action in which plaintiff failed; the act makes the nonsuit conclusive to the extent mentioned, whatever the ground of nonsuit, and it is immaterial that the plea was non cepit. It makes no difference whether a nonsuit was ordered because there had been no taking or because property of defendant was not proved); Saunderson v. Lace, 2 Pinn. "Where a writ is adjudged to be void or voidable, the parties are not considered to have been legally in court. [a] Thus, where plaintiff's first action was dismissed for his failure to make the petition more specific he was not thereby precluded from bringing a second action to determine the title to the property. Peterson v. Kissell, 148 Iowa 516, 125 NW 808.

[b] That defendant had not in fact taken out any writ of return, or actually received the property into his custody under that judgment, is no valid objection where the judgment for a return was ordered upon the motion to dismiss the writ, and plaintiff yielded to it, and returned the property to the place from which he had taken it under his defective proceedings. Walbridge v. Shaw, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 560.

[§ 270] f. Damages. In the absence of some statutory provision to the contrary,[12] on a dismissal of the action for some ground not relating to the merits, ordinarily there can be no judgment for damages,[13] except perhaps mere nominal damages.[14] However, it has been held that where plaintiff makes default after the case has been duly noticed for trial, the defendant upon having the plaintiff nonsuited may at that time take judgment for damages arising from the replevin.[15]

[§ 271] g. Reinstatement. Ordinarily the court will not reinstate at a subsequent term an action of replevin which has been discontinued,[16] or non prossed[17] at a preceding term. This may be done, however, if the discontinuance was the result of an error of the clerk.[18] And where a nonsuit is granted for nonappearance of plaintiff at the trial, and he appears a few minutes after opening of the court, and defendant in open court consents to a vacation of the judgment, it is an abuse of discretion for the court to refuse to do so.[19]

[§ 272] B. Scope of Inquiry—1. In General. The general rule that the scope of inquiry in a proceeding is limited to the issues as made by the pleadings[20] applies to an action of replevin.[21] The subject matter of litigation necessarily consists only of the property mentioned in the complaint, and it is not competent for defendant by his answer to introduce a new and distinct subject matter by claiming the release and return of other and distinct personal property,[22] even though he present such a case as would have enabled him to recover in an independent action;[23] nor can a claim for damages for taking or withholding such property or the value of its use be litigated;[24] but the rule does not exclude litigation in the action of the right to the increase of the disputed property.[25] It is proper to determine whether the property replevied was subject to an action of replevin.[26] Where an affidavit, although defective, is not assailed, it is the duty of the court to decide the issue presented by the pleadings.[27] The taking and detention of property mentioned in the body of the writ but not replevied cannot be considered.[28]

[11] [a] In Arkansas, if the suit is dismissed for some irregularity or defect in the procedure, and defendant elects to take the value of the property, the court must order a jury to assess the value. Town v. Evans, 11 Ark. 9.

[b] In Massachusetts a reference may properly be ordered to determine the value of an automobile at the time it was seized under a replevin writ, in an action on a replevin bond. Sullivan v. Martinelli, 261 Mass. 261, 158 NE 662.

[c] In Michigan it has been held that, where defendant in replevin recovers judgment by nonsuit or discontinuance and elects to take judgment for the value of the property taken, he may, under a notice of trial, have the value of the property assessed by the court. The intervention of a jury is required only when damages are to be assessed. Johnson v. Disk, 69 Mich. 108, 36 NW 738; Pearsons v. Eaton, 18 Mich. 79.

[d] In New York (1) it has been held that, where there is a dismissal or nonsuit during the trial, the value of the property may be assessed by the jury impaneled in the cause, and that a writ of inquiry need not issue for that purpose. But if there is a dismissal or nonsuit before trial, such value should be assessed on a writ of inquiry. Murphy v. Jenkins, 1 Den. 669; Van Alstine v. Kittle, 18 Wend. 524. (2) Where, however, plaintiff in replevin is nonsuited at a trial on his opening proof, and defendant gives no evidence, if defendant has put in an avowry claiming the property under distress for rent, or if it appears that the property was distrained for rent, defendant cannot take the alternative judgment for its value, and have such value ascertained on a writ of inquiry, as the statute of replevin expressly excepts cases where the goods replevied were distrained from the provision for ascertaining their value by writ of inquiry after nonsuit. Redman v. Hendricks, 3 N. Y. Super. 32.

[e] In Wyoming, where judgment of nonsuit is awarded defendant on failure of proof, he may proceed to impanel a new jury to assess the value of the property. Bath v. Ingersoll, 1 Wyo. 280.

[a] In Nebraska.—Under the statute, when a plaintiff in replevin who has obtained the property fails in his proof or fails to prosecute the action, defendant is entitled to judgment, and to a trial of his right of property or possession, for the purpose of establishing his damages. Pennington County Bank v. Bauman, 87 Nebr. 25, 126 NW 654 [rev on reh 85 Nebr. 226, 122 NW 848]; Garber v. Palmer, 47 Nebr. 699, 66 NW 656.

[b] In Vermont (1) where the suit is dismissed on grounds not going to the merits, defendant cannot recover damages for that which is a material part of the property replevied. Collamer v. Page, 35 Vt. 387. (2) But he can recover damages for the vexation of being dispossessed by the taking of it on the writ. Thurber v. Richmond, 46 Vt. 395.

[13] Ware v. Shoemaker-Bale Auto Co., 177 Ark. 227, 6 SW (2d) 285; McArthur v. Lane, 15 Me. 245; Barruel v. Irwin, 2 N. M. 223; Pannell v. Hampton, 32 N. C. 463. But see McArthur v. Howett, 72 Ill. 358 (where, in reversing dismissal of suit, the court said that, in assessing damages upon dismissal, evidence that defendant is a mere pledgee of the property is admissible, as in such case she, having no right to use the property, cannot recover damages for the loss of its use); Wood v. Braynard, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 322 (where the court held, in a case not within the provisions of the statute regulating the amount, that defendant should recover at common law his reasonable damages).

[a] Want of jurisdiction of subject matter.—On dismissal therefor since the court has no jurisdiction to determine the issue of right of property and right of possession it does not have jurisdiction to try the issue of damages which is necessarily subsidiary to and grows out of the issue of ownership and right to possession. Ware v. Shoemaker-Bale Auto Co., 177 Ark. 227, 6 SW (2d) 285.

[26] Wallingsford v. Bennett, 12 D. C. 303.

[a] Question of exempt character of property taken upon a distress for rent may be raised in replevin against the constable for taking the goods, where the magistrate in the attachment proceeding did not finally adjudicate it. Wallingsford v. Bennett, 12 D. C. 303.

Property subject to replevin see supra §§ 7–17.

[27] Dodd v. Skelton, 65 Nebr. 585, 91 NW 543.

[a] Where special proceeding in replevin is not assailed, the only duty of the court is to decide the issue presented by the pleadings. Dodd v. Skelton, 65 Nebr. 585, 91 NW 543.

Order to surrender goods. The court from which the writ issues has no power, in case the officer fails to find the property therein described, to compel defendant by order to surrender it.[29]

Goods distrained. In replevin, to recover goods distrained,[30] the only question involved is whether the levy was lawfully made.[31] Thus the legality of the distress may be tried provided there is no rent due, but if there is rent due, however small, it may not be.[32]

[§ 273] 2. Adjudication of Title and Other Rights.[33] At common law the only relief obtained in a replevin action was an adjudication as to the right of possession of the chattel at the time of the commencement of the action,[34] and in several jurisdictions it is still held that in replevin nothing can be determined but the right of possession of the property replevied.[35] Under such rule the title of the property may be investigated if the right of possession depends thereon[36] and the existence and amount of a lien claimed by defendant can be considered in a replevin action of the goods subject thereto;[37] but a defect in the affidavit of justification of the sureties on the replevin bond cannot be reached in the replevin action,[38] nor can plaintiff be held liable for wrongful acts of the sheriff in seizing the property,[39] nor a dispute between defendant and the sheriff over feed consumed by the stock replevied while in the sheriff's official custody;[40] nor can the right to the return of any money paid on a conditional sale contract be investigated in an action of replevin for the goods, unless the return of such money is a condition precedent to plaintiff's right to possession of the goods in question.[41]

In other jurisdictions, however, matters other than the right to possession of the chattel replevied may be determined even though they are not necessary or do not aid in the determination of the right to possession.[42] In some it is held that the court may determine not only the question of the right of possession, but also the right of property,[43] and in determining whether or not there shall be a return, the power of the court and the extent of inquiry are as unlimited in an action of replevin as in a suit in equity.[44] Thus it has been held that under a statute requiring judgment according to the respective rights and interests of the parties,[45] the exact extent of the special property of either party may be shown.[46] In others it is stated that defendant may set up a claim of title to the chattel in question and obtain an adjudication thereof;[47] but he cannot obtain an adjudication of the question of a third party's alleged lien as against plaintiff,[48] and in such action, no accounting can be had, the action involving only the legal rights of the parties.[49] In still others the policy of the law is to settle in one action all the conflicting claims of the parties for the possession of the property or for damages for detention or loss,[50] and the action, although primarily one for the possession of personal property,[51] is held sufficiently flexible to authorize a settlement of all the equities between the parties arising from or growing out of the main controversy[52] which exist at the time of the trial.[53] However, if the only issue made by the pleadings is title, other rights of the parties will not be determined even though all parties and subject matter are before the court;[54] but if the parties and the subject matter are both before the court, issues made by the pleadings, even though they be between parties defendant, may be determined.[55]

[§ 274] 3. Trial of Title to Real Property. While the title to land cannot be tried directly in replevin for property severed from the freehold,[56] title to land may indirectly be brought in question and admitted in evidence where the party's right to the property in dispute depends on his ownership or right to possession of the premises;[57] but proof of the title is admitted not for the purpose of trying the title but for the purpose of proving possession of the land from which the property sought to be replevied was taken, and therefore to prove constructive possession of the personal property.[58] Thus the title to land cannot be litigated in an action to recover growing crops or emblements as against one actually seized or in possession in good faith under claim of right or color of title,[59] nor can the right of possession of the land be determined in such an action if defendant's possession thereof is adverse;[60] and where the issues are not framed to try title to land but to the personal property only, and the ownership of the personal property cannot be established by the ownership of the land, trial of title to the land cannot be had.[61]

[§ 275] C. Mode and Conduct of Trial.[62] The general rules applicable to the mode and conduct of civil actions generally[63] apply in actions of replevin.[64]

(2) Where a replevin action was called for a second trial on the merits after the filing of an amended petition, omitting parties named in the original petition as plaintiffs, including the one who had made the affidavit on which the bond was given and the writ issued, and adding others as plaintiffs, and the parties were ready, and the witnesses had been summoned to testify at the trial, which was to be had after a change of venue, the court properly denied the motion to postpone the trial until the property had been redelivered to defendant. Meeks v. Clear Jack Mining Co., 141 Mo. A. 648, 124 SW 1084. (3) Continuance and adjournment in courts of justices of the peace generally see Justices of the Peace §§ 260-269.

General. The general rules applicable in other actions as to questions of law and fact, and the necessity of their determination by the court or by a jury, apply in actions of replevin.[65] If a question of fact is presented upon conflicting evidence it is the province of the jury to determine it,[66] and although, if there is no conflict in the evidence, the court ordinarily has the right to peremptorily instruct a verdict,[67] yet if the only evidence in the case is that of one of the parties to the suit, a directed verdict has been held unauthorized.[68] Thus, on an issue of fact as to the right of possession of the property involved, if the facts are uncertain or there is conflict in the evidence, it has been held that the question of plaintiff's right to possession must be submitted to the jury,[69] as should other controverted questions bearing on plaintiff's or defendant's right to possession;[70] also, if the evidence tends to show that defendant has no interest in the property whatever, it is a question for the jury to determine whether plaintiff is entitled to the sole possession of the property;[71] but where plaintiff not only fails to produce evidence in support of his claim, but, on the contrary, admits that he had leased the property from defendant and defaulted in his obligations under the lease, the judge should give binding instructions to the jury and not submit to it the question of the right of possession.[72] It is for the jury to determine, under instructions from the court, the weight of the testimony and the credibility of the witnesses.[73] So, whether defendant's evidence is sufficient to overcome plaintiff's prima facie case that defendant was in possession of the property replevied at the time suit was commenced,[74] or whether the evidence produced by one party is sufficient to overcome certain presumptions in favor of the other,[75] is for the jury. tion of the court, be postponed until after plaintiff's right to possession of the goods has been determined. Upton v. Pendry, 109 Kan. 744, 202 P 73 [reh den 110 Kan. 191, 203 P 300].

[c] Moving cause on calendar.—Defendant cannot bring the cause to trial out of its regular order on the calendar, and plaintiff need not file an affidavit of merits in order to prevent it. Regan v. Priest, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 163.

[d] Cross-examination.—The trial court may refuse to allow plaintiff to cross-examine witness as to a subject about which he did not testify in chief, upon which plaintiff introduced no testimony in the opening of his case, and which does not go to the bias or interest of the witness. Carey v. Hart, 63 Vt. 424, 21 A 537.

[e] Introduction of evidence (1) under the code provision requiring that plaintiff's affidavit, with the accompanying affidavit and the return, be made a part of the judgment roll in an action to recover a chattel, and that a copy of each of them be furnished to the court or referee on the trial, it is not necessary to formally introduce the affidavit, the requisition, or the return, in order to have such papers considered by the trial court. Martin v. Gilbert, 119 N. Y. 298, 23 NE 813, 24 NE 460, 16 AmSR 823. (2) In replevin for goods distrained for rent, if the jury find for defendant, the landlord, evidence may be introduced upon the trial and after the verdict that more rent was distrained for than was due, in order to avoid entry of judgment for double the value of the rent. Maxwell v. Light, 1 Call. (5 Va.) 117. (3) Where the case stands on a general denial, plaintiff, in presenting his case, is properly prevented from asking defendant by what claim of right he took the goods in question, since defendant is not required to disclose his defense until he takes the case. Ravine House Co. v. Bradstreet, (Vt.) 148 A 481. (4) Reception of evidence see Trial [38 Cyc 1326 et seq].

[f] Objections to testimony which may be obviated by the production of further testimony should be distinctly stated at the time the objectionable testimony is offered. McCraw v. Welch, 2 Colo. 284.

[g] On motion to set aside verdict an ex parte affidavit was allowed to be read. Smethurst v. Harwood, 40 N. J. L. 230.

[h] Failure of plaintiff to appear when the case is called for trial: (1) Defendant is entitled to have a jury and proceed with the trial to prove ownership and value of the property replevied and damages. Clark v. Wilmington Trust Co., 30 Del. 287, 105 A 834. (2) If no replication has been filed, the court may have plaintiff called and if he fails to appear, give judgment as in case of nonsuit (Peck v. Hubbard, 4 Ill. A. 566), (3) or if the case is properly on the trial calendar, defendant may rule plaintiff to reply instanter, and in default of compliance give a like judgment (Peck v. Hubbard, supra); (4) but it is error to have a jury called and sworn to try the issues joined since no issue has been joined by plaintiff (Peck v. Hubbard, supra).

[i] Proceedings under early statutes.—Where provision was made for quick trial of the validity of the claim, if defendant or person in possession of the goods claimed property therein and paid the sheriff his fees and the fees of the jury trying the claim, defendant must not only claim property in the goods, but also demand a trial of its validity, and tender the necessary fees prior to the delivery of the property to plaintiff. Miller v. Franklin, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 278.

Carlin v. Draper, 104 Wash. 29, 175 P 571. (2) Whether all the goods were of the recent invoice in replevin of property attached to satisfy claims for the purchase price, on evidence by the seller that all the goods levied on had been sold to plaintiff within sixty days of the levy, and by plaintiff, that a part of the goods were bought the previous year. [a] Which version of conflicting testimony of a party is correct, it being the sole testimony in the case, is for the jury. Pounds v. Farmers' Mercantile Co., (Mo. A.) 190 SW 374.

[b] Credibility of plaintiff's testimony as to a transfer of the property to him is for the determination of the jury, when it is unsupported by the testimony of other witnesses and is not so clear and certain in itself as to be conclusive. Goppelt v. Burgess, 132 Mich. 28, 92 NW 497.

terial to the issues involved[76] or other matters not within the issues as made by the pleadings,[77] should not be submitted to the jury; nor should estoppel of plaintiff to maintain the action be submitted where evidence of facts essential to an estoppel are lacking.[78]

Trial by court. In a replevin action tried by the court without a jury, it is for the trial court to try and decide the issues[79] and determine the credibility of the witnesses and the weight to be given their testimony.[80]

[§ 277] 2. Ownership. The question of ownership, when it is put in issue by the pleadings and the evidence is uncertain or conflicting, should be submitted to the jury,[81] as also should issues of fact which are determinative of the question of ownership;[82] but if the evidence is not conflicting,[83] or if the evidence of the one party conclusively overcomes that of the other,[84] or if defendant concedes in his answer the ownership of the property to be in plain-

[a] Questions held for jury.—(1) Under the evidence, the question whether the chattels involved belonged to a partnership consisting of plaintiff and defendant. Calderwood v. Robertson, 112 Mo. A. 103, 86 SW 879. (2) Whether plaintiff had title to a mare replevied and a right to recover her. Holbrook v. Neely, 93 Ark. 272, 124 SW 1025. (3) Landlord's ownership of one third of the small grain raised under a lease entitling the lessee to two-thirds of the small grain upon a division and the performance of the contract on his part, the other one third to be the property of the landlord, in replevin by an assignee of the landlord. Johnson v. Stone, 111 Minn. 228, 126 NW 720. (4) Ownership of goats where defendant claimed they had been stolen from him by another and plaintiff that he had raised them on his ranch. Hernandez v. Garcia, (Tex. Civ. A.) 216 SW 477. (5) Ownership of automobile which plaintiff claimed defendant's predecessor in interest had sold plaintiff, and that plaintiff had permitted defendant's predecessor to use the car at the time of the sale to third party, who in turn sold to defendant. Forrest v. Benson, 150 Ark. 89, 233 SW 916. (6) Whether plaintiff's intestate obtained the property through theft or robbery, and so acquired no title. Carden v. Swagger, (Ark.) 238 SW 31. (7) In an action to determine the right to possession to a promissory note and mortgage, evidence did not show conclusively that the sale of the note to plaintiff was subject to a condition which had not been performed, but to raise a question for the jury as to whether the sale had been consummated. Van Brunt v. Blackmer, 46 S. D. 224, 191 NW 838. (8) Ownership, possession, and value of cattle, attached by his creditors, where plaintiff bought them in his own name and paid with his own checks, and then filled up J's blank check and deposited it, it having been given him with which to buy cattle, and after that drove the cattle to J's farm and left them when J was not there, the evidence showing that J's check was protested and that in similar dealings J could refuse the cattle, and if he did, plaintiff sold them as his own. Million v. Beeding, 49 SW 437, 20 KyL 1428.

[b] Evidence considered.—In replevin for an automobile sold to defendants by a third person who purchased it with funds furnished by plaintiff, the jury, in determining whether funds were furnished to buy a car for plaintiff or for himself, should consider all the evidence, including receipts, insurance policy, and the relation between such person and plaintiff. McClemy v. Brown, 29 Del. 253, 99 A 48.

82. Carrico v. Shepherd, 26 Ind. A. 207, 59 NE 347; Edward G. Murray Lighterage, etc., Co. v. Warren, 171 App. Div. 696, 157 NYS 692; Andrews v. Grimes, 148 N. C. 437, 62 SE 519; Jackson v. Frier, 146 S. C. 322, 144 SE 66.

[a] Illustrations.—(1) Whether a trade of an automobile for land was consummated and the car delivered to defendant as part of the purchase price was an issue for the jury in a claim and delivery action for the automobile. Jackson v. Frier, 146 S. C. 322, 144 SE 66. (2) Whether plaintiff consented to the sale made by her husband of the property replevied, held for jury. Carrico v. Shepherd, 26 Ind. A. 207, 59 NE 347. (3) On replevin by a lighterage company for a canal boat seized by defendant sheriff on execution against a transportation company, whether the lighterage company and the transportation company were in fact one and the same concern was a question for the jury. Edward G. Murray Lighterage, etc., Co. v. Warren, 171 App. Div. 696, 157 NYS 692.

[b] Issue as to agreement between parties.—An allegation in the complaint that the property in question was at the time of the alleged sale by defendant on his premises and that it was to be hauled to plaintiff's warehouse as rapidly as it could be prepared, justifies the submission of an issue to the jury as to whether defendant subsequently agreed with plaintiff that the property should remain on the land of defendant as the property of plaintiff. Andrews v. Grimes, 148 N. C. 437, 62 SE 519.

83. Haveron v. Anderson, 3 N. D. 540, 58 NW 340.

84. Gunn v. Mumford, 74 N. J. L. 601, 65 A 989; Merinella v. Swartz, 123 Wash. 521, 212 P 1052.

[a] Rule applied: (1) Where the only evidence indicating that plaintiff is not the owner of the property in question is so slight as to be entirely insufficient to support a finding that she is not such owner. Gunn v. Mumford, 74 N. J. L. 601, 65 A 989. (2) Where evidence of defendants' ownership of a stolen automobile is suffitiff, but claims a lien thereon for his services,[85] the question of ownership need not be submitted to the jury. However, if the ownership of plaintiff depends upon oral testimony, the question is for the jury.[86] It has been held that if there is a contest as to whether certain acts have been done essential to pass the title of the property, ownership is a question of law to be determined by the finding of certain facts[87] and the jury are to find the facts and the court to state the conclusion or the law.[88] A case in which plaintiff avers ownership and defendant alleges that he purchased a car from plaintiff's bailee after plaintiff had refused to pay a repair bill for which the bailee had a lien, is for the jury.[89]

[§ 278] 3. Liens and Other Interests. Questions determinative of the existence of a lien or other interest in the property replevied set up by plaintiff or defendant to show his right to possession thereof may properly be submitted to the jury.[90] In replevin by a wife for goods seized on execution under a judgment against her husband, the extent and validity of the lien claimed under the execution are for the jury.[91] Where property subject to a deed of trust is replevied, an issue as to whether or not the debt was fully paid is, on conflicting evidence, for the jury.[92] The sufficiency of a given description in a mortgage to pass the title to the property is for the court and not the jury to decide.[93]

[§ 279] 4. Demand for Goods. Controverted questions determinative of the necessity of the plaintiff demanding possession of the goods prior to his bringing the action should be submitted to the jury,[94] and where a demand for the return of the goods is required of plaintiff,[95] whether it was made at a proper time and in a proper manner,[96] or whether had a demand been made it would have been unavailing,[97] are questions of fact for the court or jury trying the cause. However, if goods are sold for cash on delivery, and on delivery the buyer fails to pay, if the seller does not immediately demand the goods, but waits for a time in reliance upon a promise to pay therefor, the court must declare as a matter of law that the seller waived his right to a return of the goods and the title therein passed to the buyer.[98]

[§ 280] 5. Taking and Detention. Controverted questions concerning the taking and detention of the property,[99] as whether or not the goods were taken by defendant with plaintiff's consent,[1] whether the evidence established a partnership between plaintiff and defendant,[2] whether logs replevied were taken from plaintiff's land by defendant or from other land from which defendant had a right to take logs,[3] or whether defendant concealed merchandise from the sheriff so as to prevent his levying thereon

[c] In Pennsylvania, in replevin from a person having possession by virtue of a claim of lien, whether or not such lien exists must be settled by the jury, and a judgment for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense cannot be entered before trial, for the bond stands for the property replevied and if the lien is found to be in favor of the defendant he can in this way recover the amount of it. and with intent to deprive plaintiff thereof,[4] are for the determination of the jury under proper instruction by the court. [§ 281] 6. Fraud. Evidence tending to show fraud or bad faith presents an issue of fact, the determination of which is within the province of the jury.[6]

[§ 282] 7. Value and Identity. When disputed, the question as to the value of the property,[7] the amount thereof,[8] its identity,[9] and the correctness of its description,[10] should be submitted to the jury; but the rule is otherwise where the evidence is clear and undisputed.[11] However, if the only evidence in the case is that of one of the parties to the suit, questions of value should be submitted to the jury.[12] The failure of defendant to deny plaintiff's allegation of value does not prevent that question from being submitted to the jury.[13] If the value of the property is immaterial under the issues as framed, it need not be submitted to the jury.[14] It has been held that where, under the pleadings, the title and right to possession are not in dispute, it is for the jury to determine the value of a portion of the property replevied which is conceded to belong to an intervener.[15] The time at which the value of the property should be fixed in order to determine the measure of damages is a rule of law for the determination of the court, and not a question of fact for the jury.[16]

Special ownership. In replevin by one having only a special interest under a mortgage, it is for the jury to determine the value of such interest.[17]

[§ 283] 8. Return of Goods. It is not within the province of the jury to decide the ultimate question of a return of the property to defendant;[18] the facts may properly be submitted to the jury for determination,[19] but it is for the court to make such order and render such judgment as the facts found require.[20]

[§ 284] 9. Miscellaneous. Other controverted questions which have been held for the determination of the jury are: whether a distress warrant for rent was properly served;[21] whether in replevin by a creditor against a purchaser from the debtor, all the remaining assets of the debtor were turned over to the creditor on an oral agreement that the latter should dispose of them and apply the proceeds to the debt;[22] or whether in replevin of coins taken from a mass owned by several parties there was a severance between the money of plaintiff and of the others so that only plaintiff's money was taken.[23] If there is sufficient evidence upon which a verdict for punitive damages can be based, the right thereto is for the jury to decide.[24]

Russell v. Brooks, 92 Ark. 509, 122 SW 649. (2) In replevin to recover stolen negotiable bonds, evidence on the issue of the good faith of defendant bank's branch manager in purchasing the bonds was for the jury. Harter v. People's Bank, 221 App. Div. 122, 223 NYS 118.

[b] Matters considered.—Whether or not defendant was a willful trespasser, as regards the damages which plaintiff is entitled to recover, where defendant having cut down trees on plaintiff's land, plaintiff brought replevin for the logs, and defendant gave a bond and converted the logs, must be determined by what it knew or ought to have known, at the time of the cutting, and what it thereafter learned, though before the conversion, is immaterial. Cloquet Lumber Co. v. Burns, 207 Fed. 40, 124 CCA 600.

[§ 285] E. Taking Case from Jury. The rules applicable to the trial of civil actions generally govern in the determination of the propriety of taking a case from, or submitting it to, the jury.[25] If the evidence is conflicting as to a material issue, or if there is evidence which, although slight, would justify a finding in favor of either party, such evidence should be submitted to the jury with proper instructions, and it is error to direct a verdict,[26] sustain a demurrer to the evidence,[27] or order a dismissal or nonsuit;[28] but if the pleadings and proof fail to show that plaintiff is entitled to possession of the property, or that he has an interest therein, it is proper to direct a verdict for defendant,[29] sustain a demurrer to the evidence,[30] or order a dismissal or nonsuit.[31] Also, if the uncontradicted evidence establishes plaintiff's[32] or defendant's[33] or an intervener's[34] right to recovery, or defendant's right to judgment,[35] or if the pleadings amount to an admission of plaintiff's right to possession,[36] it is proper to direct a verdict in his favor. If plaintiff offers evidence tending to show his ownership of the property replevied and his right to the possession thereof, and no evidence is offered tending to show defendant's title thereto or any interest in or lien thereon, it is error for the court to sustain a demurrer to plaintiff's evidence;[37] and if the only evidence to indicate that plaintiff is not the owner is entirely insufficient to support a finding to that effect, the question of ownership should not be submitted to the jury.[38] If the pleadings present no issue of fact upon which plaintiff's right of possession depends, the court may direct a verdict.[39] So, if defendant admits the general ownership to be in plaintiff and attempts to set up as his only defense a special interest, which as his pleadings stand cannot be shown, the court should direct a verdict for plaintiff.[40] Where defendants have filed a counterclaim alleging ownership of the articles replevied, they are not entitled to a directed verdict on a motion based merely on the fact that they were not in possession thereof when the action was commenced;[41] nor does the fact that plaintiff before trial obtained possession of the property, thus putting defendant in a position where he cannot respond to a judgment for possession, entitle defendant to a directed verdict.[42] If the affidavit and writ of replevin do not identify the property replevied and there is no evidence identifying the property taken under the writ as the property claimed by plaintiff, the court should direct a ver-

[a] Refusal to direct verdict held proper.—Abel v. Teets, 28 S. D. 633, 134 NW 817.

[b] Submission to jury held proper.—Where plaintiff charged a conspiracy between defendant and an intervener, the fact that the intervener went with defendant when the property was surrendered to the lessor and when it was agreed it should be resold to defendant and by defendant to intervener, does not necessarily show that the intervener had a wrongful motive so as to warrant a binding instruction for plaintiff on the theory of conspiracy. Quinlan v. Rundle, 273 Pa. 479, 117 A 208.

[c] Defendant held not entitled to directed verdict.—Loupee v. Michigan Cent. R. Co., 243 Mich. 144, 219 NW 727.

[d] Direction of verdict held error.—(1) Where defendant in his answer justified the seizure and detention of the property as sheriff by virtue of an execution against a third person who it was alleged had an interest therein, it was a question for the jury whether the judgment debtor had any interest in the property at the time when levied on, and it was error to direct a verdict for plaintiff. Walker v. Ward, 104 Minn. 386, 116 NW 647. (2) Where evidence was conflicting as to plaintiff's title. Holbrook v. Neely, 93 Ark. 272, 124 SW 1025; Opsomere v. Opsomere, 162 Mich. 65, 127 NW 15; Hernandez v. Garcia, (Tex. Civ. A.) 216 SW 477. (3) Where the entire evidence was such that the court would not have been compelled to set aside a verdict for the other party. Jones v. Bristow First State Bank, 39 Okl. 784, 136 P 737. (4) Where there was evidence supporting the theories of both parties on the question of ownership and possession of the property. Fox v. Delaney, 111 Ark. 640, 163 SW 157. (5) In an action for property subject to a deed of trust where the evidence is conflicting on the issue of whether the debt had been fully paid. Snowden v. Collins, 112 Miss. 801, 73 S 793. (6) In an action to replevy a stolen automobile from one to whom it had been transferred, testimony of the former owner as to several distinguishing marks, and positively identifying it as the one stolen, is sufficient to render a directed verdict for defendant improper. Hartford F. Ins. Co. v. Stevens, 123 Me. 386, 123 A 38.

[e] Conflict as to value.—Where the testimony is conflicting as to the value of the property, the court must refuse to direct a verdict even though there is no question as to the ownership and right to possession. Sylvester v. Mackey, 48 N. D. 256, 183 NW 1019. (2) In an action to recover timber cut from land, the direction of a verdict for defendants is proper where the only evidence of plaintiff's title is an executory contract for the sale of the land to him by one not shown in any way to have title. Foley v. Richter, 134 Minn. 472, 159 NW 129. (3) In replevin for berries purchased by defendant from pickers, a verdict for defendant is proper where plaintiff did not show what portion, if any, of the berries seized came from lands in which he claimed berry rights. Le Duc v. Schnepp, 249 Mich. 622, 229 NW 455.

[b] Value of property.—It is proper for the court to include the amount in directing verdict for defendant, where plaintiff in his petition sworn to stated that amount was the value. Leisey Brewing Co. v. Cline, (Mo. A.) 211 SW 689.

Smith, 157 Miss. 202, 127 S 771. (2) Where defendant to show a special interest introduced and relied on a contract between the parties which provided that the goods should at all times be the property of plaintiff and that "at the termination of the contract for any reason whatever" defendant should "account for and turn over to" plaintiff all goods remaining unsold. The court should have directed a verdict for plaintiff. Mason Tires Sales Co. v. Mason Tire, etc., Co., 73 Colo. 42, 213 P 117. (3) Where, in replevin by consignors, who shipped to dealers in such goods, against an auctioneer to whom the dealers had pledged them for advances to them personally, plaintiffs' evidence tends to show that they had sent the goods to the dealers for sale, that they were to account promptly for them at prices fixed in memorandum invoice bills sent with them, retaining all the selling price received in excess of such invoice price, and that the understanding was that the goods were the property of the shippers, and such as were unsold were to be returned on demand, and defendant's evidence tends to show a lien for auctioneer's charges, the court should instruct the jury to return a verdict for plaintiff unless they find the lien claimed actually to exist. Costikyan v. Sloan, 33 App. (D. C.) 420. (4) Where plaintiff offered evidence tending to sustain his case and defendant offers evidence tending to show that he holds by virtue of an order of attachment, and no copy of the order appears in the record, and no statement that one was issued appears in the transcripts of the justices of the peace, and nothing appears to show the possession of defendant legal, it is not error to instruct for plaintiff. Goodwin v. Sutheimer, 8 Kan. A. 212, 55 P 486. (5) Where plaintiff's ownership is shown, and defendant, who was plaintiff's agent to purchase, shows general accounts between the parties but no lien on the goods, a verdict for plaintiff is proper as the state of the accounts should be disposed of in some other appropriate proceeding. Kert v. Endelman, 202 Mich. 289, 168 NW 423. (6) Where the evidence showed as a matter of law that defendant owed plaintiffs more than the value of the mortgaged property seized under writ of replevin, it was held that the verdict should have been entered for plaintiff. Moseley v. Riddle, (Ark.) 23 SW (2d) 631. (7) Where the evidence showed that plaintiff had never parted with title to the property, but only the possession thereof to another, it was error to refuse to instruct for plaintiff, although the evidence showed defendant to be an innocent purchaser for value from such possessor. [a] Thus (1) in replevin for stolen bonds, where defendant showed that he obtained them in due course for a valuable consideration, he was entitled to a directed verdict. American R. Express Co. v. Gallant Loan, etc., Co., (Mo. A.) 259 SW 828. (2) Where, in replevin to recover machinery transferred under a conditional contract of sale, plaintiff, as part of its main case, proved that defendant was an innocent purchaser for value, the court properly determined that plaintiff could not recover as a matter of law. 35. Harris Bros. Co. v. Nichols, 247 Mich. 89, 225 NW 525.

[a] Thus undisputed proof that defendant was not in possession of the house when replevin suit was begun, that he never occupied it, and claims no interest therein, entitles him to a directed verdict. Harris Bros. Co. v. Nichols, 247 Mich. 89, 225 NW 525.

36. Johnson v. Wagner, 42 N. D. 542, 174 NW 73.

dict for defendant although no objection is made to the affidavit and writ in that regard.[43] An instruction directing a verdict for plaintiffs without requiring a finding of their right to possession of the goods replevied is erroneous.[44] In any event the court may direct the proper form of the verdict.[45]

[§ 286] F. Instructions[46]—1. In General. The rules governing instructions in civil actions generally[47] apply to actions of replevin.[48] The parties are entitled to full instructions correctly stating the law.[49] The issues presented must be instructed upon[50] but instructions on issues not in the particular case should not be given.[51] The instructions must be applicable to the facts which there is evidence tending to prove,[52] and competent evidence which has been introduced must not be disregarded or ignored.[53] The instructions must not invade the

[a] Instructions held proper.—(1) In replevin for a horse, claimed by plaintiff as the widow of the owner, and for a saddle and bridle claimed under an alleged gift from a third person, an instruction that, if defendant purchased the horse from the plaintiff's husband during his lifetime, plaintiff could not recover the horse, was not erroneous in failing to include the saddle. Dorris v. Dorris, 149 Mo. A. 107, 129 SW 979. (2) Instructions held full, fair, and covering the substance of all the instructions asked in respect of all matters of law material and pertinent to the case. McKesson v. Sherman, 51 Wis. 303, 8 NW 200. (3) Instruction that if anything was due on a mule replevied, the verdict must be for plaintiff where the mule was sold by plaintiff upon the condition that the title remain in him until the purchase price was paid. King v. Black, 92 Ark. 598, 124 SW 237.

50. See cases infra this note.

[a] Instructions covering several theories.—It is error to refuse instructions embracing the several theories of the transaction under which the wife claims title, and to leave to the jury, in a general way, the mere question of the bona fides of the transaction. Goeschel v. Fisher, 108 Mich. 212, 65 NW 965.

[b] Ignoring issues.—Where both parties claimed that a purchaser of the property at a chattel mortgage foreclosure was acting as the agent of its grantor, instructions ignoring such controlling issue are properly refused. Koelling v. August Gast Bank Note, etc., Co., 97 Mo. A. 664, 71 SW 728.

[c] Detention of property.—Where the only material issue is whether or not defendant had lawful possession, and the evidence thereon is conflicting, a failure to properly instruct the jury upon the question of possession is reversible error. Clark v. Sublette, 117 Mo. A. 519, 94 SW 733.

[d] Fraud.—Pleading and proof held to present the issue of fraud so as to warrant an instruction thereon. Burdett v. Surdez, 94 Kan. 494, 146 P 1025.

[e] Burden of proof.—Refusal to instruct that the party alleging fraud in the purchase of goods has the burden of proof thereof was error. Williams v. Finlayson, 49 Fla. 264, 38 S 50.

51. See cases infra this note.

[a] Giving of abstract proposition of law is error when the question instructed on is not in issue and there is no evidence upon which to base it. Gray v. Sharp, 17 Colo. A. 139, 67 P 351; Webster v. Sherman, 33 Mont. 448, 84 P 878.

[b] Persons entitled to hold possession.—Modification of plaintiff's instruction, that there was no law authorizing an officer of a city to hold intoxicating liquor as against the true owner or rightful possessor, by striking out all qualifying language, is not reversible error where it has the effect to show that judgment was not based on any theory that defendant city and its officer were entitled to hold the liquors and there was no evidence of the circumstances in the part stricken out. Jackson v. Columbia, (Mo. A.) 217 SW 869.

[c] Demand.—Instruction that no demand had been proved was properly refused where defendant did not plead that no demand was made, and did not tender the property as required by law. Lacquement v. Bellamy, (Mo. A.) 253 SW 1073.

[d] Effect of intervener's rights.—In a triangular contest between plaintiff, defendant, and the state as intervener, in which it is agreed to first submit to the jury the issue between plaintiffs and defendants and subsequently to determine the state's rights, it is proper upon the trial of the first issue to refuse to charge as to the effect upon the rights of plaintiff and defendant if the issues should ultimately be decided in favor of the state. Winchester v. Bryant, 65 Ark. 116, 44 SW 1124.

[e] Forms of action.—Refusal to instruct the jury as to the different forms of action which might have been brought by plaintiff is proper. Hardy v. Clendening, 25 Ark. 436.

[f] Fraud.—(1) Where the question in issue is whether there was a sale or only a loan of the property replevied, an instruction on the question of fraudulent intent in making the sale is error. Gray v. Sharp, 17 Colo. A. 139, 67 P 351. (2) Instruction as to whether inspection of goods was fair and honest is properly refused where there was no allegation of fraud in the pleadings. Dunham v. H. D. Williams Cooperage Co., 83 Ark. 395, 103 SW 386.

[g] Illegal consideration.—An instruction to the effect that the contract is void where the consideration is illicit cohabitation or in furtherance of immorality should not be given where the party does not base his alleged rights on any such claim of title or right to possession. Woods v. Latta, 35 Mont. 9, 88 P 402.

[h] Insecurity clause in mortgage.—A charge in a replevin suit omitting reference to insecurity clause of chattel mortgage to justify seizure, as to which there was no pleading or sufficient evidence, was not error. Wolverton v. Morgan, 132 Okl. 55, 269 P 314.

[i] Possession.—Where the question of possession is unimportant it is not error to refuse to instruct the jury that continued possession created a presumption of ownership to be rebutted by a preponderance of evidence. Gavigan v. Evans, 45 Mich. 597, 8 NW 545.

[j] Presumptions.—In replevin for a mare stolen and sold by plaintiff's son, an instruction on presumption arising from delay in bringing suit is erroneous where the time elapsed was not long enough to raise any presumption against plaintiff's rights. Watkins v. White, 4 Ill. 549.

[k] Set-off.—A refusal to instruct on the subject of set-off is proper when it is entirely outside the issue being tried. Bellow v. Lintott, 68 Pa. Super. 452.

[b] Collusion and fraud.—Evidence held sufficient to support instructions regarding collusion and fraud. Warner v. Carter, 109 Kan. 285, 198 P 960.

[c] Adverse possession.—In replevin for staves cut from plaintiff's land shown to be wild and unoccupied, it is error to instruct the jury to find for defendant if his vendor had held adverse possession of the land for the statutory period. Rust Land, etc., Co. v. Isom, 70 Ark. 99, 66 SW 434, 91 AmSR 68.

province of the jury.[54] An instruction should not be entirely abstract, but should be applied to the facts in evidence.[55] Instructions must not be vague, inconsistent, or misleading in point of law or of fact;[56] but must be considered as a whole.[57] If instructions substantially embody those requested it is not error to fail to use the exact language requested,[58] nor is it error for the court to add further and additional instructions to those requested.[59] Instructions charging on the weight of the evidence should not be given.[60]

Hopper v. Callahan, 78 Md. 529, 28 A 385. [a] Instructions held inconsistent with each other and with the evidence in replevin by an insurance company to recover a premium note negotiated by its agent. St. Louis Nat. L. Ins. Co. v. St. Louis International Bank, 148 Mo. A. 551, 128 SW 761.

[b] Instructions held misleading.—(1) An instruction that a demand may be inferred from the actions, conduct, and conversation of the parties is misleading in that it comprehends conduct and conversation in the absence of the other party. Roach v. Binder, 1 Colo. 322. (2) Instruction that if "you find the evidence for and against any material allegation of plaintiff's complaint to be evenly balanced, then plaintiff has failed to prove her case, and your verdict should be for the defendant," is likely to mislead the jury into believing a balance of evidence on one allegation sufficient to defeat the entire cause of action, and it should have added thereto "as to the property described in that allegation." Webster v. Sherman, 33 Mont. 448, 461, 84 P 878. (3) Instruction to find for defendant if at the time defendant, as sheriff, seized the goods as the property of B, B was interested in the profits to be realized from the sale thereof, authorized the jury to found their verdict upon an immaterial issue since plaintiff may have been the owner and entitled to the possession of the goods notwithstanding B's interest in the profits of sales. Rapp v. Vogel, 45 Mo. 524. (4) An instruction which did not show that as between the parties title to personal property passes without any delivery whenever the sale is completed, but assumed that under the evidence an agreement to sell was not and could not be a complete sale. Holliday v. Burgess, 34 Ill. 193. (5) In replevin to recover property taken under an execution against the plaintiff's vendor, where the sale is claimed to be within the statute of frauds, an instruction stating the question to be whether the plaintiff or his debtor owned the property is misleading for failing to point out the distinction between a title good as against all the world, and a title good as between the parties but invalid as against creditors. Israel v. Day, 17 Colo. A. 200, 68 P 122.

[c] Instructions held not misleading.—(1) In stating necessity for a demand of the property replevied. Carstens v. Earles, 26 Wash. 676, 67 P 404. (2) In replevin against a sheriff where the issue was as to fraud in the sale of property by X, execution defendant, to M, the plaintiff, an instruction that if the sale of the property from X to M was made to defraud the creditors of A the sale was fraudulent and void, even though it would have more fully stated the law if it had stated that it would not be void as to M unless he had knowledge of the fraud. Miller v. Bryan, 3 Iowa 58. (3) A charge that plaintiff must prove "absolute" ownership of the property, and the use of the words "absolute owner" and "owner" as meaning the same was not misleading. Harward v. Davenport, 105 Iowa 592, 75 NW 487. (4) Instruction to assess the damages at the value of the property as proven was an instruction to find the value and could not have misled the jury. Jeffreys v. Greeley, 20 Fla. 819. (5) In suit to replevy Liberty bonds which were originally coupon bonds, but later recalled by the government and others issued, there being no evidence that the coupon bonds were in existence at the time of trial, plaintiff's instruction referring to bonds as those "mentioned in evidence" was not misleading. Feil v. Wells, (Mo. A.) 268 SW 893. (6) Instruction held not to give the jury to understand that they were finding issues of ownership and possession later than the date of the beginning of the action. Ladany v. Assad, 91 Conn. 316, 99 A 762. See also Trial [38 Cyc 1598 et seq].

[a] Instruction held proper.—An instruction assuming the necessity for plaintiff to prove a demand where a prior instruction fully stated the law as to the necessity for demand and the instruction complained of, when properly construed related to the possession required to be in defendant at the commencement of the action. Dow v. Dempsey, 21 Wash. 86, 57 P 355.

[59] Eldred v. Oconto Co., 33 Wis. 133.

[a] Statute providing that judge shall give without change each instruction asked, or shall refuse it in full, is not violated where it appears that plaintiff's logs had been mixed with defendants and there was no evidence that they differed in description, quality, or value, and plaintiff was unable to identify his own, by an instruction of the law at defendant's request, "if the logs taken from the plaintiff could be identified," adding of its own motion a statement of the law "if the logs could not be identified." Eldred v. Oconto Co., 33 Wis. 133.

[60] Carter-Battle Grocer Co. v. Rushing, (Tex. Civ. A.) 85 SW 449.

[a] Estoppel.—(1) In an action to recover goods attached as those of a third person, an instruction that if defendant's agent was not deceived by statements made to him by plaintiff's agent as to the true ownership of the goods, but relied on his own judgment or other information, defendant's plea of estoppel by reason of the statements of plaintiff's agent would not be a good defense, was erroneous as a charge on the weight of evidence (Carter-Battle Grocer Co. v. Rushing, (Tex. Civ. A.) 85 SW 449), (2) and the error is emphasized by the erroneous refusal of the court to charge that, if plaintiff's agent did not make the statements to defendant's attorney as testified to by the latter, the jury should find for plaintiff on the issue of estoppel raised on account of such alleged representations (Carter-Battle Grocer Co. v. Rushing, supra).

is clearly erroneous which leaves out questions as to the ownership or right to possession of plaintiff, and confines itself to the question of the detention of the property in dispute.[62]

[§ 288] 3. Value. The jury should be instructed as to the various matters which should be considered in determining the value of the property replevied,[63] and upon what conditions they should find the value for the one or the other party;[64] but if there is no evidence as to value, instructions thereon should not be given.[65] If only one witness has testified it is error to refuse to charge that if the jury believed the testimony of that witness they should accept his valuation.[66]

[§ 289] 4. Damages. The sole purpose of an instruction upon the question of damages is to furnish the jury a rule by which to estimate them.[67] Where there is an entire absence of any evidence tending to show that plaintiff has sustained any damages by reason of the unlawful detention of his property, no instruction should be given on that point,[68] nor should punitive damages be defined where the evidence does not show any willful wrong or malice on the part of defendant.[69]

[§ 290] G. Verdict and Findings[70]—1. In General—a. Requisites and Sufficiency in General. Statutes in the various jurisdictions have provided certain requisites for verdicts in replevin actions.[71] Verdicts therein are to follow and be controlled by such statutes,[72] and if in disregard thereof are not authorized;[73] but a verdict which contains all that the statute prescribes must be held sufficient.[74] A verdict or finding must be so definite, special, and full that the court may ascertain from its terms what judgment to render thereon,[75] must be supported by the weight of the evidence,[76] and must not be repugnant or inconsistent.[77] If a verdict can be understood it will be sustained although informal[78] and will not be set aside for formal defects or omissions therein, if it is supported by special findings and the evidence in the case.[79] The verdict need not show on what ground the jury reached their conclusion,[80] and the findings should state the ultimate facts pleaded, and not the probative facts.[81] Although it is the better form to embrace all the findings in one verdict, the fact that the findings are embraced in separate verdicts is merely an informality which will not vitiate the verdict.[82]

[§ 291] b. Responsiveness to Issues in General.[83]

The verdict and findings in an action of replevin must be responsive to all the material issues of fact raised by the pleadings and proof,[84] and are generally sufficient if they follow the pleadings.[85] If a verdict is responsive to the issues it will not be rejected because of immaterial findings,[86] nor will a verdict responsive to the paramount issues of the case be held insufficient because of a failure to find on an immaterial issue;[87] but if it varies from the issues in a substantial matter, as where it finds only a part of that which is in issue, a judgment thereon cannot be sustained.[88] It is not required, however, that the

[a] Verdict held sufficient.—Where plaintiff's right to possession depends upon the validity of a note and mortgage to which defendant pleads payment and usury, a verdict that the chattels are the property of defendant and that he is entitled to possession thereof is tantamount to a general verdict upon the issues of usury and payment and is sufficient to support a judgment for defendant. Nunn v. Bird, 36 Or. 515, 59 P 808.

[b] Verdicts held insufficient.—(1) Where defendant in replevin for personalty exchanged for realty counterclaimed, asserting that plaintiff through fraud inserted in the deed a clause obligating him to assume a mortgage, a finding for defendant was fatally defective, where it did not contain a finding exonerating him from negligence in accepting a conveyance containing an assumption clause. De Groot v. Veldboom, 167 Wis. 107, 166 NW 662. (2) A verdict finding that at the time the suit was filed defendant wrongfully detained the property from plaintiff and that the same has not been delivered to plaintiff held in effect to find that plaintiff was entitled to possession of the property when the suit was filed. Teel v. Teel, (Mo. A.) 8 SW (2d) 1086.

[c] Findings held sufficient.—(1) If they support the judgment and conform to the theory of the prevailing party. Freeman v. Trummer, 50 Or. 287, 91 P 1077. (2) Where they conform to the new matter averred in the answer and disprove plaintiff's right, although there are no findings conformable to the complaint, no request having been made therefor. Freeman v. Trummer, supra.

[d] Findings held insufficient.—In an action of replevin for clover seed raised on certain land, a special finding showing that plaintiff had leased the land for one year and as much longer as he desired to retain it, will not support a conclusion of law that he is entitled to clover seed produced upon the land in the third year after the lease was executed, unless there is also a finding that the tenancy continued up to that time. Hess v. Hess, 119 Ind. 66, 21 NW 339.

[e] Finding a conclusion of law.—A special finding that "We the jury find that the plaintiff had a right to replevy the mill," amounts to no more than a conclusion of law, which the jury cannot decide and will not authorize a judgment for the possession of the property. Keller v. Boatman, 49 Ind. 101.

[f] Verdict must dispose of all the issues, and if special it must find every fact in issue essential to support the judgment. Everit v. Walworth County Bank, 13 Wis. 419.

[g] Presumptions.—Where there are no written pleadings and the record does not disclose the issue tried, and the verdict is sufficient as to some issues which may arise in an action of replevin, it will be presumed that it is responsive to the issue which was tried. [a] Where there is a substantial difference between issues joined (1) a verdict finding on only one of the issues is insufficient. Middleton v. Quigley, 12 N. J. L. 352. (2) In replevin for goods seized in distress for rent, the pleas of "non tenuit" and "nothing in arrear" are substantially different, and a verdict finding for plaintiff on the issue of "nothing in arrear," without any finding on the issue of "non tenuit" will not support verdict shall be expressed formally and precisely in the words of the issues, or that it shall find affirmatively or negatively on every issue;[89] but it will be liberally construed as to matters of form, and although it is expressed in an informal manner, if it contains sufficient to show the intention of the jury, the court may correct the informalities and put the verdict into proper form so as to make it serve as a basis for a judgment.[90] A verdict in replevin ordinarily sufficiently covers all the issues, where it finds for plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, and that he is entitled to the immediate possession of the property described and sets out the property and its value, and assesses damages for the detention.[91]

[§ 292] c. General Verdict or Finding.[92] As a general rule, in the absence of a request for a special finding, a general verdict or finding for plaintiff or defendant responds to all the issues as to which the law does not require a special verdict and is a sufficient finding in favor of the prevailing party,[93] unless such verdict or finding is contrary to the evidence[94] or is repugnant or inconsistent,[95] as where it is upon different and inconsistent pleas;[96] and such general verdict or finding is sufficient to support a judgment ordering a return of the property.[97] Thus a general verdict or finding of the issues in plaintiff's favor includes all the issues, except that of value.[98] Likewise a general verdict for defendant, and assessing damages, is as against plaintiff a sufficient finding on all the issues.[99] Under some statutes, however, a general verdict for plaintiff in an action for the recovery of specific personal property is not sufficient, but it must specify the property to which he is entitled and its value.[1] Special findings control a general verdict if inconsistent therewith,[2] but all doubts as to their meaning will be resolved in favor of upholding the general verdict,[3] and if not inconsistent therewith a general finding is not cut down by special matters stated in the verdict.[4]

(2) In an action of replevin against a sheriff and execution plaintiffs, a verdict for defendants generally as to part of the property, instead of for the sheriff alone, is good. Brunk v. Champ, 88 Ind. 188. (2) In replevin to recover property fraudulently obtained in an exchange of personalty, the fact that plaintiff did not return or offer to return everything received in the trade before suing, while not in itself sufficient to overthrow a general verdict for him, defeats the verdict in connection with special findings to the effect that defendant did not prevent such offer or advise plaintiff that he would not accept it. [4] Washburn v. Roberts, 72 Ind. 213; Lyman v. Goll, 111 Kan. 530, 207

[§ 293] d. Title and Right to Possession.[5] The verdict in an action of replevin must be responsive to the issue of title or right to possession, or both, according as such issues are raised by the pleadings,[6] and must not be contradictory or inconsistent,[7] although an informality or defect in such a verdict will not be fatal, if it is sufficient when aided by special findings and the evidence.[8] Thus, where the question of the ownership of the property is in issue, the verdict must contain a finding on such question in accordance with the pleadings,[9] and must decide the ownership or right to possession of all the property in issue.[10] Ordinarily if the verdict is silent as to a portion of the property in dispute, it is defective and insufficient.[11] The verdict need not show the general ownership of the property if the only issue is as to whether one or the other party has a special interest therein.[12] Thus, where plaintiff sues claiming a special ownership, a finding for plaintiff and that the property be returned to defendant, stating its value, is sufficient,[13] but a verdict that he is entitled to the possession thereof of a value which is the full value of the property and damages is erroneous;[14] and where defendant claims a special interest, a general verdict for him which does not show whether he is a general or special owner is irregular and insufficient.[15] It has been held, that under statutes providing that, where the property has been delivered to plaintiff and the jury find for defendant, they shall also find whether defendant had the right of property or the right of possession only at the time of the commencement of the action, a special verdict specifically stating the finding on such Nottingham v. Vincent, 50 Mich. 461, 15 NW 551. (2) In an action of replevin for property levied on as that of a person other than plaintiff, a verdict that plaintiff is the general owner, and that defendant has a lien to the amount of his levy, is contradictory, and insufficient to sustain a judgment. [a] Illustrations.—(1) A verdict finding the issues for defendant, but finding that the property is in a person not named in any one of the pleas, cannot be sustained. Shelton v. Franklin, 68 Ill. 333. (2) Plaintiff cannot have judgment on an issue of property in him, unless the jury find the property to be in him as alleged, and a verdict that the property is not in defendant or in those in whom he alleges it to be by way of inducement is not sufficient. Chambers v. Hunt, 18 N. J. L. 339.

[b] Where defendant pleads title in another, a verdict that the property was in plaintiff is responsive to the plea and covers the issues, although it omits the converse of the finding—that the property was not in the party set up as owner in the plea. Thompson v. Dyer, 25 R. I. 321, 55 A 824, 25 R. I. 421, 56 A 446.

[c] Verdict must settle the issue of ownership. Wheeler v. Steadman, 99 Or. 414, 195 P 818.

[a] Thus (1) a verdict finding plaintiff to be entitled to part of the property, and silent as to the rest, is fatally defective, although the omitted property has not been taken from defendant's possession and his answer asks for no return. [b] Exception to rule.—Where plaintiff has possession of the property and the case is tried on the question as to what portion defendants are entitled to have returned to them, a verdict finding defendants entitled to a specified part is inferentially a finding that plaintiff is entitled to the remainder, and is sufficient; but plaintiff is entitled, if he claims it, to have the jury also specifically state in their verdict the portion he is entitled to. Campbell v. Rexburg First Nat. Bank, 13 Ida. 95, 88 P 639.

Silence of verdict as to portion of property replevied as showing only partial recovery see infra § 296.

[12] Single v. Barnard, 29 Wis. 463.

[b] In Illinois (1) where the pleas are non cepit, property in defendant, property in a third person, and justification of the taking under an execution against such third person, a verdict for defendant should contain a finding of the issue for defendant, that the property is the property of the party defendant in the execution; and a finding that defendant is not guilty and that the right of special property is in defendant is not sufficient. Hanford v. Obrecht, 49 Ill. 146. (2) Under a plea of property in defendant as sheriff under an execution, and in the judgment debtor, a verdict for defendant should find the issue for defendant and that the property in question was the property of the judgment debtor. matters is required,[16] but the majority rule holds that ordinarily it is not necessary that there shall be an express finding that plaintiff or defendant, as the case may be, was the owner or entitled to the possession of the property at the time of the commencement of the action.[17] Thus, where his title and right of possession are in issue, a general finding for plaintiff is equivalent to a finding that he is the owner and entitled to the possession of the property which is the subject matter of the suit.[18] Likewise, a general verdict or finding for defendant determines against plaintiff an issue of property in defendant[19] or a stranger.[20] Also a verdict which finds facts from which ownership results as a matter of law is sufficient,[21] so that, where the only issue is whether or not plaintiff gave the property to defendant, plaintiff's instructions are not erroneous for failure to require the jury to find that plaintiff is entitled to the immediate and exclusive possession of the property.[22] A verdict which passes on the right of possession only does not ordinarily,[23] although there is some authority to the contrary,[24] sufficiently respond to an issue of ownership. However, if each party claims the right of possession by virtue of absolute ownership so that the party entitled to possession is necessarily the owner, a verdict which finds either party entitled to the possession of the property and the value thereof is a sufficient finding of ownership.[25] Verdicts such as not guilty,[26] or that defendant did or did not unlawfully take,[27] or did or did not unlawfully detain[28] the property, which are responsive to the issues of non cepit and non detinet, or which find only on the issue of damages,[29] are not responsive to an issue of ownership. However, it has been held that, where the evidence supports a plea of special property and the right of possession, a verdict finding defendant not guilty, assessing damages, and directing a return of the goods, although incorrect in form in failing directly to decide the issue of special property, is substantially right, and the court can correct the error in entering judgment.[30] And, where defendant pleads non cepit and non tenuit and property in himself, a verdict finding him guilty, and assessing damages, has been held equivalent to a finding of the property in plaintiff.[31] In some jurisdictions the issue of right of possession is sufficiently covered by a verdict finding the right of property in plaintiff or defendant and assessing damages for its detention,[32] but a verdict for defendant on the ground that plaintiff failed to show any title to the property in dispute does not settle the right of possession,[33] and after such a verdict it becomes the duty of the court to inquire further and determine who is entitled to the possession.[34] Upon a plea of not guilty a verdict is not sufficient which fails to find who is entitled to the right of possession of the property.[35] A verdict finding title and the right to immediate possession in defendants is sufficient to support a judgment dismissing the action.[36] A finding that plaintiff is the absolute owner of the property determines defendant's contention that a particular ownership existed between plaintiff and defendant therein.[37] On a trial by the court without a jury, a finding on the issues of ownership and right to possession may be made by a recital in the judgment rendered.[38]

[a] In Nebraska (1) a general verdict for plaintiff has been held responsive to an issue of ownership and of the right to possession. Baum Iron Co. v. Union Sav. Bank, 50 Nebr. 387, 69 NW 939; Degering v. Flick, 14 Nebr. 448, 16 NW 824. (2) Properly the finding should find the right of property and the right of possession. Degering v. Flick, supra. (3) And whenever the findings required by the code can or may be of practical worth to any party in the cause, whenever the interest of the prevailing party is an issue, the findings there prescribed must be made. Ulrich v. McConaughey, 63 Nebr. 10, 88 NW 150, 69 Nebr. 773, 96 NW 645. (4) But where there is no issue and the finding when made would be of no substantial utility to anyone in the cause, a judgment will not be reversed at the suit of one who is in no way prejudiced by the informality. Robertson v. Caldwell, 9 Ind. 514. (2) Finding by the court sitting without a jury "that all of the allegations in plaintiffs' complaint are true and sustained by the evidence" is sufficient in form to cover every issue of fact presented by its averments, and amounts to a finding that plaintiffs' possession of the property sought to be replevied was rightful at the time of defendant's taking of the same into his possession. Yraceburn v. Cape, 60 Cal. A. 374, 212 P 938. (3) Finding of the issue for plaintiff with an express finding of ownership in plaintiff, but with no express finding as to the right of immediate possession, is sufficient, for the general finding is equivalent to an express finding that plaintiff is entitled to immediate possession. [b] Prejudicial error.—Verdict will not be disturbed by informality which does not injuriously affect either party. Gregory v. Morris, 1 Wyo. 213.

[c] Effect of statute.—A statute requiring the jury to find whether defendant had the right to property, or the right of possession, relates to the consideration of the grounds upon which the verdict is based and not to the returning of a verdict, and does not prevent the return of a general verdict. Jones v. Parker, 39 Wyo. 423, 273 P 687; Gregory v. Morris, 1 Wyo. 213 [aff 96 U. S. 619, 24 L. ed. 740].

[21] National Cash Register Co. v. Booneville, 119 Wis. 222, 96 NW 558.

[a] Ownership legal conclusion from facts found.—A verdict to the effect that defendant is entitled to possession, and that plaintiff unjustly took and detained the property, from which facts ownership results as a matter of law, is sufficient, although it does not expressly determine the ownership of the property. National Cash Register Co. v. Booneville, 119 Wis. 222, 96 NW 558.

[22] Feil v. Wells, (Mo. A.) 268 SW 893.

[a] Thus, where plaintiff alleges that he is the owner and entitled to the possession of specified property, a verdict that plaintiff is entitled to the possession of such property as described in the complaint is insufficient to sustain a judgment for plaintiff, because of its not finding on the issue of ownership. Feller v. Feller, 40 Or. 73, 66 P 468; Yick Kee v. Dunbar, 20 Or. 416, 26 P 275.

[24] Robertson v. Caldwell, 9 Ind. 514.

[a] Finding "that the possession of the property mentioned in the complaint be given to the plaintiff" is equivalent to a finding of property in plaintiff, and that he is entitled to possession. Robertson v. Caldwell, 9 Ind. 514.

[b] In justice's court.—Plaintiff being able to prove either a general or special ownership in himself with the right of possession, a verdict that plaintiff is entitled to the possession of the property without finding that he is the owner thereof is sufficient to sustain a judgment for him. Buck v. Young, 1 Ind. A. 558, 27 NE 1106.

[§ 294] e. Taking or Detention by Defendant. A verdict in an action of replevin should also be responsive to the question of unlawful taking or unlawful detention, or both, when in issue, otherwise a judgment on the verdict cannot be sustained.[39] As a general rule the verdict should either in general or specific terms pass on the question of unlawful detention;[40] but where the verdict, when construed in the light of the issues and evidence, shows beyond all question the fact of unlawful detention, it is not fatally defective because it does not expressly state such fact.[41] Such issues are responded to by a general verdict or finding,[42] or by a verdict of guilty or not guilty,[43] but not by a special verdict specifically finding on other issues, but silent as to whether or not the property was unlawfully taken or detained;[44] nor does a verdict of unjust detention respond to an issue of unlawful taking.[45] However, where the verdict in form is on other issues, but the jury in finding them indirectly, although not in terms, passes on the question of unlawful detention, it is not fatally defective because it does not expressly state such fact.[46]

[a] Thus (1) a verdict for "plaintiff on all the issues," and that "plaintiff is entitled to the immediate possession" of the property, is sufficient, if no objection thereto is made, when rendered, without expressly finding ownership in plaintiff, and that it was wrongfully detained by defendant. Hormann v. Sherin, 6 S. D. 82, 60 NW 145. (2) The fact that the complaint contains an allegation of "wrongful taking" does not furnish a sufficient reason for setting aside a verdict for wrongful detention, when such detention is not only the main issue, but is the gravamen of the action, and when the case is tried mainly on that theory, and no objection to the complaint, based on such allegation, is raised by special plea, and the verdict is supported by the evidence. Wis.—Eldred v. Oconto County, 33 Wis. 133.

[a] Illustration.—Verdict held to amount to a finding that defendant's taking possession and detention of property replevied were and each of them was wrongful, and, being wrongful, such taking could not become a foundation for that portion of defendant's counterclaim based on the provisions of the estray laws, since

Possession of sheriff as detention. A finding that defendants are illegally withholding possession of the property is proper although the actual possession is in the sheriff under the writ.[47]

[§ 295] f. Possession at Commencement of Action. If defendant's possession at the time the writ was issued is in issue, a special verdict should specifically find thereon,[48] but, if it is not in issue, a finding as to such fact is not essential.[49] Thus, it has been held, under the statutes in some states that, in order to sustain a judgment for plaintiff, the verdict or special finding must show that defendant was in possession of the property when the writ of replevin was issued or at some time thereafter;[50] and in others that findings which fail to find that at the time the demand was made plaintiff had the right to possession of the property in dispute are insufficient to support a judgment for plaintiff.[51] But, where judgment is for defendant for a stipulated sum, an omission to make a finding as to the right of possession at the time of the commencement of the action is immaterial.[52] However, since the gist of the action is unlawful detention, a finding merely that plaintiff had possession of the property at the commencement of the action will not sustain a judgment against defendant for unlawfully detaining it.[53]

[§ 296] g. Partial Recovery. The verdict in replevin may be for plaintiff as to a part of the property claimed, and for defendant as to the rest.[54] If it is silent as to a part of the property claimed, its silence is equivalent to a verdict in favor of defendant as to such property.[55] However, the verdict should apply to each article mentioned in the pleadings,[56] and if plaintiff is entitled to only a partial recovery, it should expressly be for plaintiff as to the specific articles to which he is entitled, and for de-it amounted in fact to a finding that plaintiff's sheep, when taken by defendant, were not estrays. Yraceburn v. Cape, 60 Cal. A. 374, 212 P 938.

[b] Form of verdict.—Under plea denying the wrongful taking and wrongful detention, if defendant be successful, the verdict should be not for the return of the property, but simply "for defendant"; this would settle plaintiff's right to the chattel, but require him to pay the costs. Hiser v. Webster, 139 Md. 236, 114 A 897.

(2) A verdict finding the property to be in plaintiff is not responsive to unlawful taking or detention. Huff v. Gilbert, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 19. (3) A verdict finding the property to be in plaintiff and awarding damages for its detention is defective in not finding that the detention was unjust on the part of defendant. Swain v. Roys, 4 Wis. 150. (4) A verdict that plaintiff was the owner and entitled to the possession of the property, and fixing the value thereof, is insufficient for failure to find on the issues whether defendant took the property from plaintiff or detained it. Hickey v. Breen, 40 Mont. 368, 106 P 881, 20 AnnCas 429; Olcott v. Gebo, 54 Mont. 35, 166 P 300. (5) Where the evidence proving that the property was in the possession and control of defendant was weak, a verdict finding that plaintiff was at the institution of the suit the owner and entitled to the possession of the property, but failing to find whether defendant detained it, is insufficient, although the court submitted the issue of unlawful detention in its instructions. [45] Ronge v. Dawson, 9 Wis. 246.

fendant as to the rest.[57] If the evidence shows that defendant and plaintiff are joint owners of the property, a verdict for defendant does not determine their rights therein.[58] Where the action is against two or more defendants, one may be found guilty and the others not guilty.[59]

[§ 297] h. Return of Property.[60] If the articles replevied have been disposed of, it is needless for the jury to award them specifically to the prevailing party,[61] but if the evidence is such that the jury should have found for a deliverance of the property, the failure to do so is a matter of complaint on the part of the prevailing party.[62] The verdict need not find for the return of property on which there is no issue;[63] and where plaintiff has obtained possession of the property under the writ, a verdict finding the issues for plaintiff for the return of the property is improper in form.[64]

[§ 298] i. Alternative Verdict.[65] The statutes usually require that a verdict in favor of a party for a return of the property should be in the alternative for the possession of the property or for the value thereof in case it cannot be returned.[66] Such statutes are mandatory,[67] and failure to comply therewith renders the verdict insufficient.[68] If the action is against codefendants not jointly liable, the verdict should not be general in form and against both defendants, but should be against each defendant separately for the specific property, or its value, wrongfully in his possession,[69] but an alternative verdict is not necessary upon such issues, where it is in favor of the party who has the possession of the property,[70] or where there cannot be a return of the property,[71] or if at the time of the trial the property has become worthless.[72] In some jurisdictions the verdict need not be in the alternative,[73] but may

[a] Thus, where defendant pleads property in himself, and the evidence shows that defendant and plaintiff owned the property jointly, a verdict for defendant on such issue does not determine judicially that the property belongs to him exclusively, so as to prevent plaintiff from recovering his individual share at a future period in some appropriate action. (2) Where plaintiff gave a bond and obtained the property, a verdict, "We find for defendant," is insufficient in that it did not call for a return to defendant of the property in dispute, and, if a return thereof cannot be had, for the value thereof. Davis-McGee Mule Co. v. Marett, 129 S. C. 36, 123 SE 323; Archer v. Long, 32 S. C. 171, 11 SE 86.

[d] Awarding money damages (1) instead of possession of the property or its value is improper. Goldstein v. Michaelson, 198 NYS 868. (2) In replevin for property sold under a conditional sales contract, the verdict, if for plaintiff, should not be for the amount of defendant's debt, but should find for plaintiff the property, describing it, and its value or the value of plaintiff's interest therein. Evans v. Junius Hart Piano House, 140 Miss. 467, 106 S 9.

[e] In replevin before justice, the justice, if he finds for plaintiff, should find the value of the property and that plaintiff is entitled to the possession. Beemis v. Wylie, 19 Wis. 318.

[f] In California (1) under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 627, 667, in an action of claim and delivery, a verdict for the possession of the property or its value is sufficient, and it is not necessary that the verdict should provide for any delivery of the property; and, where the verdict finds a right of possession, the right to a delivery, if it can be had, or if not, the value of the property, in the alternative, is a conclusion of law which the judgment must contain, but not the verdict. Ryan v. Fitzgerald, 87 Cal. 345, 25 P 546. (2) It is essential to sustain a judgment for plaintiff that the court shall find that he is entitled to a recovery of the property sued for, and that a finding that he is entitled to judgment for a particular amount is not a compliance with the statute. Washburn v. Huntington, 78 Cal. 573, 21 P 305. (3) But a verdict which fails to find the value of the property is informal and insufficient. Stewart v. Taylor, 68 Cal. 5, 8 P 605.

O'Laughlin, 1 Mont. 81 (defendant might complain that the jury failed to find, in their verdict, the value of the property, that he was entitled to a return thereof, and to assess damages, but plain-be either for the return of the property or for the value thereof.[74]

[§ 299] j. Description of Property. As a general rule a verdict in an action of replevin must describe the property involved with such definiteness and certainty that it may be clearly identified;[75] but if the parties by their pleadings and proof seem to understand thoroughly just what articles are in dispute, objection cannot be made to a verdict describing the property in the same language as used in the petition;[76] and, where the property is specifically described in the pleadings, the description in the verdict may be made certain by a reference therein to the pleadings.[77] Also, it has been held that a repetition in a general verdict for defendant of the description furnished by plaintiff in the replevin affidavit is both unnecessary and improper.[78] Where, however, the description of the property in the pleadings is insufficient, a verdict which refers only to the property described in the pleadings is fatally defective.[79] If the property involved consists of a number of articles or animals, some description more precise than merely their number is necessary,[80] and a verdict from which it is impossible to tell whether the jury found plaintiff entitled to all, or a part of the property, and if but to a part, to what part is so indefinite and uncertain that no judgment can be rendered upon it.[81]

[§ 300] k. Submission of Special Interrogatories.[82] Under some statutes the court may, in its discretion, submit questions for special findings, in an action of replevin, in addition to the usual findings in such an action,[83] but only controverted issues of fact may be so submitted.[84] As a general rule, however, a general verdict which disposes of all the issues is sufficient to support a judgment in such an action,[85] although some of the specific questions which are submitted to the jury are returned unanswered, particularly where no objection is made at the time of the return of the verdict, or until after the jury is discharged.[86]

Smith v. Willoughby, 24 N. D. 1, 138 NW 7. (2) Verdict for plaintiff is bad for uncertainty if the court cannot determine therefrom what property the jury intended to find belonged to him. Dowell v. Richardson, 10 Ind. 573.

[b] Description held sufficient.—(1) A description of an animal giving its age, sex, and color is all that is required. McConnell v. Watkns, 42 Okl. 214, 140 P 1167. (2) A horse described as "one three year old dark gray filly." McConnell v. Watkins, supra. [b] Illustrations.—(1) In an action to recover possession of a stock of goods covered by a mortgage, where no other goods were referred to in the pleadings or evidence, a verdict for "the recovery of the possession of the goods or the sum of $200" sufficiently identified the property. Reardon v. Averbuck, 92 S. C. 569, 75 SE 959. (2) Verdict in replevin awarding plaintiff property sued for was held sufficient as to description of property. Dalton v. Bilbo, 126 Okl. 139, 258 P 274. (3) A reference to the property in the verdict as "said property" is sufficient. Anderson v. Lane, 32 Ind. 102. (4) Verdict "that the defendant is not guilty in manner and form as the plaintiff in his declaration hath alleged" is sufficient under the general issue. Hotchkiss v. Ashley, 44 Vt. 195.

[c] Where the answer puts in issue only the title to, and not the identity of, the article described in the complaint, a verdict that "we the jury find for the plaintiff and the value of the property taken to be $72.05 and interest" is sufficiently definite, where the undisputed averments of the complaint show what property is referred to. [a] Thus (1) a verdict which finds plaintiff entitled to that portion of the property described in the complaint, to wit, forty-nine hogs, is too indefinite where the complaint described sixty-six hogs. Guille v. Fook, 13 Or. 577, 11 P 277. (2) A verdict that two of the four hogs replevied were the property of plaintiff, and two were the property of defendant, is too uncertain. Dowell v. Richardson, 10 Ind. 573.

81. Richardson v. McCormick, 47 Iowa 80. See Gulath v. Waldstein, 7 Mo. A. 66 (holding that in replevin for tools and shed it is impossible to say what property plaintiff is entitled to where the jury merely "find for the plaintiff and assess his damages").

[a] Thus a verdict declaring plaintiff "entitled to the following property described in her petition viz: (naming the articles)," but which fails to enumerate the articles, is so indefinite and uncertain that no judgment can be rendered thereon. Richardson v. McCormick, 47 Iowa 80.

verdict or findings in an action of replevin, as in civil cases generally, should be construed to uphold rather than to defeat the verdict or the judgment thereon,[88] and should be construed in connection with the issues and proof, and, although informal or irregular, will generally be held sufficient if, when so construed, the intention of the jury is clear and covers all the issues in the case.[89] Findings are to be read and considered together, and, if possible, reconciled so as to prevent any conflict on material points.[90] A verdict may be construed with reference to the presumption that in replevin, where the property is taken under process, it will be presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that it was taken from the possession of defendant.[91] If no one is injured or prejudiced thereby, mere inaccuracies in the verdict,[92] as surplusage,[93] will not invalidate it. But where the verdict points specifically to one issue and omits others, it cannot be aided by intendment,[94] except where material or immaterial issues are joined and the material issue is passed upon by the jury.[95] A finding that plaintiff or defendant is the owner, etc., should be construed as relating to his title or possession at the time the action was commenced.[96]

[§ 302] m. Amendment or Correction. As a general rule, in replevin as in other civil actions,[97] where the findings of the jury are free from ambiguity and their intention can be ascertained from the data given in the verdict or referred to in the pleadings, the court may amend the verdict in point of form or language so as to give the real intention full expression in proper legal terms,[98] as by rejecting surplusage from the verdict,[99] or where the jury find for plaintiff but award no damages for the detention, by adding nominal damages.[1] But the court cannot amend or change the verdict of the jury in matters of substance,[2] as where the verdict finds damages only, it cannot be amended by the court by entering both debt and damages without the consent of the jury or of proper counsel;[3] nor can a verdict be amended so as to find the value of the property, where such value is not assessed by the jury;[4] nor can a verdict, defective in substance, be amended by adding nominal damages.[5] The jury may, before a delivery and record of the verdict, correct it to state separately where required by the statute, the value of the goods replevied, and the damages;[6] or the court may, of its own motion, remand the verdict to the jury, with instructions to find separately the value of each article replevied,[7] or to find the value of the property and damages for its detention;[8] but after the jury have been discharged, it is improper to recall them at a later day, and, upon further evidence submitted, allow them to return a verdict assessing the separate value of each article in controversy.[9]

[§ 303] n. Objections.[10] An objection to the form of the verdict comes too late if made after the jury have been dismissed.[11]

[§ 304] o. Waiver or Curing Defective Verdict. Where the verdict is defective in substance, as to some matter required by law, it cannot be cured by a waiver of one of the parties;[12] but mere inaccuracies or informalities will be regarded as waived if no objection is made thereto, before the jury are discharged.[13] Thus, where the statute requires that in the event of the jury making a certain finding they shall assess the value of the property, a failure to make such an assessment is not cured by an assessment in the judgment,[14] or by a waiver of such defect by one of the parties only.[15]

[§ 305] 2. Value of Property[16]—a. In General. A finding in a verdict in replevin as to the value of the property must ordinarily be supported by the evidence;[17] but, although it has been held error for the court to find the value solely on the complaint and affidavit of plaintiff supporting the writ,[18] in other jurisdictions it is held that, where there is no evidence as to the value of the property,[19] or where defendant waives submission to the jury of the value of the property,[20] the jury may adopt as such value the amount alleged in the complaint. It is competent for the jury to base their finding of value on an affidavit of the goods under a delivery bond,[21] but they are not controlled by the amount stated in such an affidavit;[22] and, if it was made so long before the trial as to be no evidence of the present value of the goods, it cannot be used for the basis of their finding;[23] nor is the sheriff's estimate of value made for the purpose of fixing the amount of the bond to be given by claimant conclusive on the issues;[24] nor does the fact that an offer of judgment has been made, but refused, control the jury or make it erroneous for them to return a finding for a less amount than that contained in the offer.[25] In assessing the value of the property involved, the jury ordinarily should not award a greater amount than that stated in the pleadings and included in the issues of the action;[26] and it has been held error to direct the jury to find the value of property seized at a sum different from that stated in the pleadings of both parties.[27] If defendant prevails plaintiff cannot object to a verdict fixing the value at an amount less than that stated in his affidavit.[28] The parties may determine the value of the property by stipulation.[29] The value of the property and damages for its taking and detention constitute separate and independent items and should be found separately.[30] However, if the parties so agree they may be found in one sum which is to settle all further claim to the property.[31] Also, where a portion of the goods cannot be returned, it has been held that damages may be included in the general award of money;[31½] and in jurisdictions where the prevailing party cannot obtain possession of the property if it is in the possession of the other party, but is limited to a money judgment, the verdict may combine value and damages in one sum.[32]

[a] Valuation held excessive.—In replevin to recover goods, including groceries, sold by plaintiff to defendant for three thousand three hundred nineteen dollars and thirty-five cents, where no one testified to the value thereof when taken by plaintiff under the writ, and defendant testified that the grocery stock had been increased from one thousand three hundred dollars to one thousand six hundred dollars or one thousand seven hundred dollars, a verdict for defendant, assessing the value of the property at four thousand one hundred twenty-four dollars and eighty-six cents, was excessive by four hundred and five dollars and fifty-one cents. McWherter v. Randell, (Mo. A.) 247 SW 467.

[b] Valuation held not excessive.—(1) In replevin of a stolen automobile, a verdict for four hundred and fifty dollars, which was twenty-five dollars more than the value of the car as shown by the evidence, was not so excessive as to indicate passion or prejudice. Wald v. Auto Salvage, etc., Co., 190 Iowa 11, 179 NW 856. (2) The retail price placed by the owner on property did not conclude the jury in a replevin action as to its value. Engeln Electric Co. v. [a] Illustration.—A statute requiring a verdict in replevin to find the value of the chattel at the time of trial is not satisfied by finding it, without any evidence, as stated in plaintiff's affidavit, made twenty-seven months before the trial. Gilroy v. Everson-Hickok, 103 App. Div. 574, 93 NYS 132.

Presumption. In jurisdictions requiring the value to be assessed as of the date of trial, a sum fixed by the jury as to the value of the property will be conclusively presumed to be its value at the time of the trial.[33]

[§ 306] b. Necessity of Assessing Value. At common law the value of the property was immaterial, and no method was provided whereby it could be determined;[34] and if there is no statutory provision which allows the jury to find the value of the goods replevied, they are without jurisdiction to do so.[35] However, under most statutes,[36] where the effect of the verdict is to change the possession of the property from one party to another, as where the property has not been delivered to plaintiff and the verdict is in his favor, or where the property has been delivered to him and the verdict is for defendant, for its return, there must be a finding of the value of the property,[37] or the value of the right of possession, if it is found.[38] However, where the value of the property is stated in the affidavit attached to the petition, the omission of the jury to find the value is not an incurable error;[39] nor is it necessary if it was stated in the writ and plaintiff did not request an instruction that the jury find the value,[40] or where the pleadings make no issue on the matter,[41] or where the parties agree by a stipulation entered into during the trial on the value of the property.[42] Also, an assessment of the value of the property is not necessary as to property, whether a part or the whole thereof, which is in possession of the prevailing party at the time the verdict is returned.[43] It has also been held that the jury

[a] Complaint.—In replevin for a note and mortgage, where the actual value is stated in the complaint to be the principal of the note, it is error to charge that in fixing the value the jury may consider the interest on the note which had accrued prior to the action. [a] Illustrations.—(1) Where property is claimed as exempt from attachment and a replevin bond is given therefor, the jury shall find the value of the property in case the verdict is rendered against claimant. Levy v. Moog, 69 Ala. 63. (2) A verdict for plaintiff which merely assesses damages without assessing the value of the property is erroneous. Quinn v. Parke, etc., Mach. Co., 5 Wash. 276, 31 P 866. (3) Issues were properly submitted to the jury to ascertain the value of the property, when there was evidence that it had been wrongfully converted by plaintiff. Penny v. Ludwick, 152 N. C. 375, 67 SE 919. (4) A verdict that the property be returned or its value, without assessing its value, is defective. Keller v. Sawyer, 104 Ark. 375, 149 SW 334.

[b] Statute is mandatory.—(1) Ellis v. Berndt, 223 App. Div. 421, 228 NYS 487. (2) The statute requires the jury to assess the value of the property, even though there is no testimony as to the value. Archer v. Long, 32 S. C. 71, 11 SE 86.

[c] Effect of failure to find.—A verdict does not authorize a judgment for a return of the property where it does not determine the value of the property. Tardy v. Howard, 12 Ind. 404.

[d] Party entitled to complain.—(1) Where the property has been delivered to plaintiff and the jury find for defendant, plaintiff cannot complain of a failure to find the value of the property. Anderson v. O'Laughlin, 1 Mont. 81. (2) Where the verdict is for plaintiff, failure of the jury to assess the value is not an error of which defendant can complain. Coyne v. Coyne, 199 Wis. 263, 225 NW 138, 935.

[e] Verdict for a sum certain.—In such a case a verdict for a certain sum of money is reversible error, although there is no proof that the chattel could be returned, or in whose possession it is. Conklin v. McCauley, 41 App. Div. 452, 58 NYS 879.

[f] It is proper for the jury to assess the value of the property in replevin, if defendant prevails and plaintiff has taken the property. Major v. Hast, (Mo. A.) 263 SW 466.

[g] Situations in which value assessed.—(1) First, where there has not been a delivery of the property to plaintiff; second, where the property has been delivered to plaintiff and defendant by his answer claims a redelivery; in other cases a special finding as to the value is unnecessary. Archer v. Boudinet, CodeRepNS (N. Y.) 372. (2) In an action of replevin where the record shows that a bond was given and the property retained by defendant, the court properly refused a request to charge that, there being no testimony as to the present custody of the goods, the most plaintiff would be entitled to recover would be damages for detention of the property, and submitted the question of the value of the property to the jury. McCrary Refrigerator Co. v. Basco, 79 Pa. Super. 185.

[h] Trial by court.—A finding of value is essential to sustain the judgment where the cause is tried to the court without a jury as well as where it is tried to a jury. Armour v. Seixas, 80 Wash. 181, 141 P 308.

[i] In justice's court.—Under Rev. St. (1881) § 1550, where the cause originates before a justice, and the verdict is that defendant have return of the property, the jury need not assess the value, or the damages. Burket v. Pheister, 114 Ind. 503, 16 NE 813.

Or.—McCargar v. Wiley, 112 Or. 215, 229 P 665; Prescott v. Heilner, 13 Or. 200, 9 P 403.

[a] Time possession obtained.—Where an auto was delivered to plaintiffs during the progress of the action, they were not entitled to have the value assessed. McCargar v. Wiley, 112 Or. 215, 229 P 665.

[c] Special property.—(1) A statute providing that the value shall be found where the verdict is in favor of the party having possession of the property applies whether the right of property of the party, in whose favor the verdict is, is general or special. Cumbey v. Lovett, 76 Minn. 227, 79 NW 99. (2) Where plaintiff has possession, and claims a special ownership, a verdict is not contrary to law because it does not find the value of plaintiff's ownership, or the value of the property. Kellar v. Van Brunt, 1 Nebr. (Unoff.) 301, 95 NW 668.

[d] Surplusage.—It is not necessary for the jury to assess the value of the property when the prevailing need not assess the value of the property where the action is for specific property, and not in alternative of damages, and the property remains in the possession of the sheriff.[44] Also, if there is no alternative judgment for the value of the property and none for damages, defendant, in case of a verdict for plaintiff, is not prejudiced by a failure to find the value of the property.[45] In some jurisdictions it is held that, where the property has been disposed of, the verdict may be for damages only, and not for the value of the goods.[46] If the verdict assesses damages, or a single sum, which is evidently the amount of the value of the property, it is sufficient.[47]

Value of money. In replevin of lawful money of the United States, it is unnecessary for the jury to find the value of such money.[48]

[§ 307] c. Separate Value of Each Article—(1) In General. In some jurisdictions, under the statutes existing therein, the value of each article need not be assessed separately, but a finding of the total aggregate value of the property is ordinarily sufficient;[49] but if a part only of the property can be recovered, the prevailing party is allowed to elect to take that part and a judgment for the value of the remainder, and may demand that the jury assess the value of the property separately.[50] In others a finding of the value of any specific portion of the property is necessary only where there is an instruction to that effect by the court, and, in the absence of such an instruction or a demand therefor, a failure so to find will not invalidate the verdict,[51] and if the finding is by the court it is not error for it to find the aggregate value, particularly where issue is taken only upon the aggregate value.[52] In still others, the jury must, as far as practicable, assess the value of each article separately;[53] particularly where the party against whom the verdict is found and who is in possession has the privilege of returning all or any number of the articles in satisfaction of the judgment pro tanto, and the articles sought to be recovered are distinct and separate,[54] although whatever, party has possession, but if they do, such assessment should be treated as surplusage not vitiating the verdict or preventing a proper judgment. Smith v. Southwest Lumber Co., 23 Ariz. 271, 203 P 336.

46. Dillard v. McClure, 64 Mo. A. 488; McGraw v. Franklin, 2 Wash. 17, 25 P 911, 26 P 810. See Gambrell v. Gambrell, 130 Ky. 714, 113 SW 885 (holding that the verdict may be for the value of the articles not to be had).

"In a case where the defendant has not the possession there cannot be any necessity or utility in finding the value. The whole case is resolved into one of damages." Dillard v. McClure, supra.

[a] Thus, where it is shown that some of the goods have been sold to third persons, and so cannot be returned, a verdict for damages only, and not in the alternative for the value of the goods, is not erroneous, especially where the point is not raised below. McGraw v. Franklin, 2 Wash. 17, 25 P 911, 26 P 810.

But see Eaton v. Caldwell, 3 Minn. 134 (holding that, where the value has not been assessed by the jury, it cannot be assumed to be the amount of damages found).

[a] Illustrations.—(1) A verdict for defendant in replevin need not find the value of the property, if it find damages which are evidently the amount of the value of the property, with interest, which finding is not complained of as to the amount by either side. Western Stage Co. v. Walker, 2 Iowa 504, 65 AmD 789. (2) A verdict that plaintiff was entitled to immediate possession, concluding, "and in case such possession cannot be had we assess her damages at $75," was a finding of the value of the property, and was sufficient to support judgment for plaintiff. Svendsen v. Ketchmark, 39 S. D. 61, 162 NW 932.

[b] Rule applicable under statute and at common law.—A verdict for defendant for a sum of money only, where the goods were taken by plaintiff on the writ and disposed of, must be construed as for the value of the goods, where there was no evidence of damages for caption and detention, and is equally good at common law and under Pa. Act April 19, 1901 (P. L. p 90) § 7. Canadian Car, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania Iron Works Co., 256 Fed. 339.

[c] It is unimportant that the finding be shown in words to be the value of the chattels if the evidence shows that fact. Canadian Car, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania Iron Works Co., 256 Fed. 339, 167 CCA 509.

Latimer County Nat. Bank, 106 Okl. 159, 233 P 438; Humphrey v. Baker, 71 Okl. 272, 176 P 896. See Woodburn v. Chamberlin, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 446 (where a portion of the defendants claim the entire possession by virtue of a chattel mortgage in hostility to both their codefendants, the sheriff, and plaintiffs, and the proof shows that the sheriff holds it in subserviency to the mortgage, it is unnecessary to determine the value of the property admitted by the mortgagees to be in their possession, a general assessment of the whole value being sufficient).

51. Kellogg v. Burr, 126 Cal. 38, 58 P 306; Whetmore v. Rupe, 65 Cal. 237, 3 P 851; Johnson v. Fraser, 2 Ida. 404, 18 P 48; Smith v. Willoughby, 24 N. D. 1, 138 NW 7; Bank v. Calkins, 16 S. D. 445, 93 NW 646.

[a] An error can arise in such a case only where such an instruction will be pertinent and proper, and the instruction is asked and refused. Whetmore v. Rupe, 65 Cal. 237, 3 P 851.

[b] Discretion of court.—The statute places the finding of the value of specific articles within the discretion of the court; it may require it or dispense with it, according to the circumstances of the case as shown by the evidence. Johnson v. Fraser, 2 Ida. 404, 18 P 48.

[c] Purpose of rule is to enable the court by its judgment to afford the party entitled to the property a complete remedy in case the property cannot be obtained on execution, and also to enable the wrongdoer to return what he can of the property and reduce the judgment pro tanto by a return of a portion thereof. Smith v. Willoughby, 24 N. D. 1, 138 NW 7.

52. Black v. Hilliker, 130 Cal. 190, 62 P 481; Kellogg v. Burr, 126 Cal. 38, 58 P 306; Brenot v. Robinson, 108 Cal. 143, 41 P 37; Whetmore v. Rupe, 65 Cal. 237, 3 P 851.

[a] Thus the failure of the trial court, without a jury, in finding for defendant, to find the separate value of each article involved, is not ground for a reversal where plaintiff has only alleged in his complaint their aggregate value. Black v. Hilliker, 130 Cal. 190, 62 P 481.

53. Avary v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co., 96 Ala. 406, 11 S 417.

[a] Sufficiency.—A verdict in a trial of title to a stock of goods, which states the number and value of each of the different articles composing the stock, the value of each lot separately, and then the aggregate value of the whole stock, substantially complies with such statute. Avary v. Perry Stove Mfg. Co., 96 Ala. 406, 11 S 417.

54. Ark.—Neal v. Cole, 144 Ark. 547, 223 SW 18; Hobbs v. Clark, 53 Ark. 411, 14 SW 652, 9 LRA 526; Hanf v. Ford, 37 Ark. 544; Noland v. Leech, 10 Ark. 504.

Miss.—Oppenheimer v. Telhiard, 123 Miss. 111, 85 S 134; Brady v. Cook, 68 Miss. 636, 10 S 56; Spratley in common understanding, are parts of one whole may be treated in the verdict as one article and valued accordingly.[55] However, the requirement for fixing the value of each special article replevied is not jurisdictional and may be waived.[56] Thus, it has been held that it is not necessary that the jury should assess the value of the articles separately where a return thereof is not possible;[57] where a portion of the goods has been disposed of;[58] where the separate articles are of the same kind and class;[59] where there is no allegation or proof to support such a finding;[60] where no demand is made at the time of the verdict for a separate valuation;[61] or where the judgment rendered is for the return of the property and not for any money demand if it cannot be found.[62] Also, the right to a separate valuation is waived where the property replevied is treated as parts of a single unit,[63] or where a party makes no request for such valuation before verdict, or fails to object to a verdict in solido before the jury is discharged.[64] The losing party has been held not prejudiced by the failure of the court to assess the value of each article in accordance with his request.[65] Where plaintiff in his petition described each article replevied and the value thereof, together with the aggregate value of all the articles, a verdict for the total sum fixed by him is in effect a finding that the separate values of the various articles are the same as fixed by plaintiff.[66]

[§ 308] (2) Remedy for Failure To Find. Where the value of each separate article is not found, as required, the remedy of the aggrieved party is by motion for a venire de novo before the jury are discharged,[67] or by a new trial;[68] or, under some statutes, if the verdict is valid in other respects it may be remanded to the inferior court, with an order to award a writ of inquiry to ascertain such separate values.[69]

[§ 309] d. Value of Special Interest. As a general rule, where the verdict for the return of the property or its value is in favor of a party who has only a special or limited interest therein, it must find and specify the nature, extent, and amount or value of such special interest,[70] which finding must not

[a] Purpose of assessment.—Defendant has an election to return any of the property or its value and is entitled for this purpose to have the value fixed by the jury. Hanf v. Ford, 37 Ark. 544.

[b] Reason for rule.—(1) It is the privilege of defendant to return any one or more of the articles recovered in satisfaction pro tanto of the judgment, and he is deprived of his right by a verdict of the value in gross. Cole v. Crawford, 69 Tex. 124, 5 SW 646. (2) Defendant should have the privilege to return any one or more of the articles in satisfaction pro tanto of the judgment. Live Oak Ranch Co. v. Ingraham, (Tex. Civ. A.) 44 SW 588.

[c] Verdict in solido is erroneous and should not be received by the court if objection is made thereto at the time of its rendition, or the court may of its own motion decline to receive it and send the jury back with instructions to find separately the value of each separate and distinct piece of property. Hanf v. Ford, 37 Ark. 544.

[d] Parties entitled.—The rule is purely for the benefit of defendant, and if he does not complain a verdict finding the value in gross is sufficient. Cole v. Crawford, 69 Tex. 124, 5 SW 646.

[e] Property applied to.—(1) If the action be for distinct and separate articles having no identity of character, the value ought to be assessed for each distinct and separate article. Pickett v. See Lebb v. Peabody, 103 Or. 405, 205 P 819 (holding that, although plaintiff, who replevied an automobile containing a battery rented by defendant, would be liable to defendant only for the reasonable rental value of the battery during the period of detention, not for the rental defendant agreed to pay, a finding by the trial court that the rental value of the battery was the amount agreed to be paid was a sufficient finding of its reasonable rental value to support a exceed the amount or value of such interest;[71] and where there is a finding of such special interest and it is within the value of the property as proved, it is not necessary that there shall be a general finding of the value of the property.[72] It has been held, however, that this doctrine is applicable only where a return of the property may be awarded as an alternative with judgment for its value,[73] and hence does not apply to a verdict in favor of a party who is in possession under a chattel mortgage, with authority to dispose of the property according to the terms of the mortgage, and according to law, to satisfy the mortgage debt or any part thereof;[74] nor in case of replevin by one partner against another partner for the possession of partnership property need there be a finding of the value of the successful partner's special interest in the property.[75] It has also been held in an action of replevin for goods distrained, on an issue of no rent in arrear, that the jury may fix the amount of rent due with interest from the time the writ of replevin is sued out, and are not confined to the value of the goods distrained.[76]

[§ 310] 3. Damages.[77] As a general rule the question of damages is one of the issues in the case, and if there is any proof to support it there should be a finding assessing them.[78] Thus as a general rule a verdict for the recovery or return of the property to plaintiff or defendant as the case may be should assess damages in his favor for the taking or detention, or both,[79] and such verdict may be for

[a] Lien (1) in replevin by a mortgagee of a railroad company against a town treasurer, to recover possession of cars and locomotive seized by defendant for taxes assessed on the railroad company's lands, a verdict for defendant is fatally defective if it fails to specify defendant's interest. Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. St. Clair, 34 Mich. 518. (2) A verdict for defendant whose claim arises from a lien on the property, without a finding as to the value of his possession, is not responsive to the issues and is contrary to law. Creighton v. Haythorn, 49 Nebr. 526, 68 NW 934. (3) When one claims possession by virtue of a lien, the measure of his recovery in the event his possession cannot be restored is the amount of his lien, and it is therefore necessary for the court to find that amount which is not necessarily what he claims is due him, but only what is actually due. Griffith v. Reddick, 41 Cal. A. 458, 182 P 984.

[b] Jury should adjust the respective interests of the parties. Dixon v. Atkinson, 86 Mo. A. 24.

[c] Finding of value held sufficient.—Finding held not objectionable because the value of the interest of a third party in property he was purchasing under agreements was not found, where the interest was determinable by calculation. Haley v. Traeger, 92 Cal. A. 360, 268 P 459.

[d] Form of finding improper.—A verdict in a replevin action "for plaintiff for $750, representing the difference between the purchase price of the diamond, less $352 paid on account, plus $350 damages, making a total of $1,100," was not in proper form. Gindin v. Gottlieb, 191 NYS 218.

[e] Joint ownership.—Where plaintiff and defendant had equal interest in property, on a verdict for defendant the assessment of the value of his interest was proper. McDowell v. Hollingsworth, (Mo. A.) 10 SW (2d) 314.

[f] Right of possession.—(1) Where the evidence establishes title in plaintiff and the right of possession in defendant, the court should submit to the jury, not the value of the property, but the value of defendant's possession. Tyson v. Bryan, 84 Nebr. 202, 120 NW 940. (2) A verdict which finds the right of possession in defendant, but does not find the value of such right, and proceeds to find the value of the property, is insufficient and will not support a judgment. [a] Value of property can be found only where the jury find the right of property, as distinguished from the right of possession, in the prevailing party. Search v. Miller, 9 Nebr. 26, 1 NW 975.

[b] Special property.—Where defendant is not in possession and claims a special property, a verdict for him must fix the value of the special property, and if the value of the chattels is greater than the value of the special property, the value of the chattels need not be found, but the verdict must set forth the reason why the value of the chattels was not fixed. [a] Separate assessment.—In replevin for property which has not been delivered to plaintiff, the jury should assess its value, and damages for its detention, and not simply rena certain sum as damages without specifying whether for the taking or detention.[80] But since the question of damages is not the prime object of an action of replevin, it is not essential, in the absence of allegations and proof, to the validity of a verdict therein that they shall be assessed in favor of the prevailing party,[81] and the omission to so find is not such a defect as may be complained of by the party against whom the verdict is rendered.[82] In order to warrant a judgment for damages, the verdict must assess damages as such,[83] but a finding of interest on the value found may be construed as the damages sustained.[84] Where a special verdict for damages is inconsistent with a general verdict therefor, the former controls.[85] A finding of damages must be supported by the evidence and cannot be based on mere conjecture.[86]

[§ 311] H. Judgment[87]—1. Form and Requisites—a. In General. The statutes generally provide for the judgment to be entered in replevin;[88] and while a judgment is fatally defective which is not entered in substantial compliance with the statute,[88½] if the entry is sufficient in substance, mere want of technical form will not render it void.[89] The judgment should not be uncertain,[90] and should determine the rights of the parties with respect to der a general verdict for damages. Phillips v. Melville, 10 Hun (N. Y.) 211.

[b] Verdict against two defendants not jointly liable, and having no privity of interest upon which to base a joint responsibility, should find against each for such damages as are proved for the detention by him. Norris v. Clinkscales, 47 S. C. 488, 25 SE 797.

[c] In Delaware, where plaintiff has possession of the property, a verdict in his favor should not be for the return of the property, but for nominal damages because of its unlawful detention. Hitch v. Riggin, 26 Del. 84, 80 A 975.

[a] It is error, where it is open for the jury to find that defendants had never taken possession of any of the goods, for the court to direct the jury after they have found for plaintiff "to retain said goods and to recover of defendants no damages," that they must award "some damages" to plaintiff. Norman Printers' Supply Co. v. Ford, 77 Conn. 461, 59 A 499.

[b] Necessity for proof.—Although damages are claimed, if none are proved, none need be found in the verdict. Buck v. Young, 1 Ind. A. 558, 27 NE 1106.

[c] Right to waive.—A verdict in replevin which finds for plaintiff will support a judgment, although it does not assess the damages, since the statute requiring such an assessment is for the benefit of plaintiff, and he may waive compliance therewith. Hopper v. Hopper, 84 Mo. A. 117.

[a] Explanation of rule.—Since damages are not the prime object of an action of claim and delivery, but are the nominal issue only, a general verdict for plaintiff without assessing damages will not be set aside at defendant's instance. Gaines v. White, 1 S. D. 434, 47 NW 524.

[a] Assessment of the value of the property will not answer this purpose. Black v. Winterstein, 6 Nebr. 224.

[b] Assessment by jury.—In replevin, interest on the value of property or its equivalent, if the latter is a measure appropriate to the property in controversy, is to be ascertained by the jury and assessed in verdict, and, in the absence of an appropriate finding by the jury, including interest in an alternative money judgment is error under Rev. Gen. St. (1920) § 2918. Cary v. Hyer, 91 Fla. 322, 107 S 684.

[b] Where plaintiff dies and the suit is revived by the heir under Code § 2849, because no one would administer on the estate, a personal judgment against the heir is not absolutely void but is merely reversible error, the proper judgment under Code § 2257 being that the creditor have judgment and execution against the land descended. Edgington v. Jamison, 2 Lea (Tenn.) 569.

Phœnix Distillery Co., 171 Iowa 505, 153 NW 148. (2) A judgment in replevin as follows: "Judgment property entered November 15, 1912" will not be set aside as irregular as to form, where it appears that plaintiff was legally entitled to the judgment, and no objection to the judgment was raised, except on an appeal from orders awarding inquisition and assessing damages. Hoyt v. Carson, 60 Pa. Super. 172.

[b] Form in justice's court.—Where, in replevin, a justice of the peace entered judgment finding the right of property and possession in plaintiff, "and I do assess his damages in the premises $125.00 and costs of suit," the judgment, although informal, was sufficient as a basis for an action on the redelivery bond. every part of the property in controversy.[91] Where the verdict is erroneous,[92] judgment should not be entered thereon.[93] A judgment similar to that rendered in assumpsit is not proper;[94] nor can a recovery as for money had and received be had when the action is in the form of replevin to recover money not specifically described.[95] Where there is a failure to recover for the property not seized because it is not shown to have been in the possession of defendant at the time of the institution of the action, care should be taken to embody this fact in the verdict or judgment so as to avoid a plea of res judicata in any subsequent proceedings to recover it.[96]

[§ 312] b. Scope of Relief. While certain statutory provisions contemplate that the judgment should be confined solely to a determination of the right of possession of the property, its value, and damages for its detention,[97] under other statutes great latitude is allowed in actions of replevin, and the statutory action is considered sufficiently flexible to authorize a determination of both legal and equitable rights, as it is the policy to settle in one action all the equities in the property which is the subject of the controversy.[98] In accord with such principle, it has been held that, if the title or right to possession changes pending trial, the replevin judgment should adjust the equities of the parties as of the time of trial,[99] and such principle is also reflected in the adjustment of the special interests of the parties to the property.[1] Affirmative relief has been awarded by the judgment to plaintiff[2] and

[a] Rule restated.—"True, the gist of the action is the right of the plaintiff to the immediate possession of the property at the commencement of the action, but if the title or right of possession to the property changes subsequent to the commencement of the action, and prior to the date of the trial, the judgment should adjust the equities between the parties as such equities exist at the time of the trial; the adjustment of such equities being necessary for a final and complete determination of the controversy." McDonald v. Schantz, 44 Okl. 648, 650, 146 P 36, 37.

[b] Plaintiff's title divested pending trial.—Where plaintiff's title or right of possession is legally divested after suit is brought and before trial, judgment should be only for damages for detention up to the time his right of possession ceased and not for a return of the property or its value. Deal v. Osborne, 42 Minn. 102, 43 NW 835.

[c] Defendant's right to possession divested.—Where the action for possession of mortgaged property was prematurely commenced, but at the time of trial defendant's right of possession had ceased due to the maturity of the mortgage, the verdict and judgment should adjust the equities as of the time of trial so that defendant will recover not more than damages for the detention prior to the maturity of the mortgage. [a] Judgment for amount of check to defendant[3] where the relief sought is incident to the contest over the possession of the property. Such rule permitting the equities of the parties to be adjusted by the replevin judgment has reference, however, only to the equities arising out of the contest over the property itself,[4] and unless the damages claimed do so arise, they are generally not recoverable.[5] Nor does such rule permit judgment to be entered for a return of the property, and, in addition thereto, a judgment for the value of the property;[6] and the judgment need not settle the equities between plaintiff and defendant where plaintiff is adjudged to have no title or right of possession to the property and judgment is rendered for a codefendant.[7]

On counterclaim. While in some jurisdictions the courts have refused to grant defendant affirmative relief by judgment on a counterclaim,[8] in other jurisdictions judgment on a counterclaim may be rendered where the counterclaim is connected with, or arises out of, the contest in replevin for the property.[9]

[§ 313] c. Separate Valuations.[10] In some jurisdictions, where the evidence has established that the property in controversy consists of separate articles which are in no way dependent on one another for their value, in order to permit the unsuccessful party to return what property he can in pro tanto satisfaction of the judgment,[11] the judgment must state separately the value of each article sued for,[12] while in other jurisdictions judgment for the aggregate value of the property is sufficient,[13] at least where the prevailing party failed at the trial to demand separate valuations.[14] It has also been held unnecessary to specify separately the amounts awarded as the value of the property and as damages.[15]

[§ 314] d. Description of Property. A judgment in replevin must describe with reasonable certainty the particular property sought to be recovered,[16] but the recitals or descriptions in the judgment may be aided by the entire record comprising the judgment roll.[17] Thus the judgment is sufficient where there is a reference to a sufficient description in the complaint[18] or in the findings or verdict,[19] and a judgment is not invalidated by uncertainty of description caused by a mistake where from the whole of the record it can easily be known what was intended.[20] But a judgment is bad where it fails to describe the property with reasonable certainty,[21] or does not

[d] Change in form of action.—Where the property was not taken from defendant's possession by the writ, and the parties changed the replevin action into one for an accounting to determine the amount of defendant's lien, the proper judgment should have been for plaintiff for possession of the property on payment to defendant of the amount of his lien, or, in case possession could not be had, for the value of the property less the amount of defendant's lien. refer to any other pleading or paper which contains a sufficiently definite description,[22] so as to render it possible to identify the property and guide the party ordered to deliver it,[23] or to inform the sheriff serving the execution what property is included and what excluded.[23½] A judgment which refers to the property described in the complaint is fatally defective if the description in the complaint is defective.[24]

[§ 315] e. Parties. A judgment in replevin may not be rendered against one not a party to the action;[25] and where property sought to be replevied has never been delivered to one who interpleads in the replevin suit, no verdict or judgment can be rendered against him for either the property or the money.[26] Nor can judgment for a return be rendered against part of several defendants who never claimed or held possession,[27] or against a defendant in favor of plaintiff and a codefendant;[28] but where defendants have a joint possession, a joint judgment against them is proper.[29] Where two defendants are sued jointly, and judgment goes against plaintiff, it is proper to render a joint judgment in favor of defendants,[30] unless one defendant fails to claim any interest in the property,[31] or unless the interest of each defendant is separate,[32] and in a joint replevin suit there may be judgment for one plaintiff and against another.[33] Conversely, in replevin against several defendants, the court may adjudge the return of the goods in favor of such of defendants as are entitled to a return and refuse it as to the others,[34] so that on a verdict for defendants in replevin, where one of several defendants disclaims, the judgment may be for the other defendants;[35] or the judgment may award a part of the property to each of two or more defendants.[36]

[§ 316] f. Conformity to Pleadings, Issues, Verdict, and Findings—(1) In General. In compliance with general rules,[37] a judgment in replevin must conform in all substantial particulars to the pleadings,[38] issues,[39] and proof,[40] and also to the verdict[41]

and findings.[42] Generally, the judgment is limited to the relief claimed in the pleadings,[43] so that under a declaration in replevin alleging a stated amount to be the value of the property, it is error to enter judgment for a greater sum,[44] and where the verdict assesses the value of the property replevied or the damages for its detention at a sum greater than that alleged in the petition, and no amendment is made or asked, the judgment should be entered only for the sum stated in the petition.[45] In some jurisdictions the court is empowered, under a prayer for general relief and for special relief as well, to extend the relief specifically prayed for or to give such other relief as is warranted by the allegations of the complaint.[46] Where the relief awarded exceeds that claimed in the pleadings, plaintiff, by consenting to a reduction, may have judgment entered in form producing the same result as if the verdict had been correctly rendered.[47] While a judgment for the return of property in a replevin suit, under a verdict which fails to find the value of the property to be returned, is erroneous, yet, in the absence of an appeal therefrom, it is not void, and in such case, if the party recovering elects to have the property returned and demands the same, he is entitled to receive it;[48] and where an error has been made in the form of a judgment, by which its scope has been enlarged, or its amount increased beyond that plainly authorized by a verdict, referee's report, or decision of court, the judgment is not void or inoperative, the error being an irregularity merely which must be corrected, if at all, by motion in the court of original jurisdiction.[49]

[b] Verdict for damages for detention did not authorize a judgment for the value of the property. Eaton v. Caldwell, 3 Minn. 80.

[c] Verdict for value (1) of the property for plaintiff authorized a judgment for a return, or, if a return could not be had, for the value. Lewisohn v. Apple, 12 NYCivProc 274. (2) Verdict for value and damages did not authorize a judgment for a return. Holliday v. McKinne, 22 Fla. 153.

[d] General verdict for plaintiff in replevin, fixing the sum due under a contract of sale of a piano, and giving plaintiff a lien for that amount, did not warrant the entry of a judgment that the jury assess such amount as damages for detention. Guerold v. Holtz, 103 Mich. 118, 61 NW 278.

[e] Verdict of not guilty in replevin, based on defendants' taking and detention, was held not to authorize a judgment for the return of the property to defendants (Replevin Act § 22). Lucas v. Gansler, 335 Ill. 274, 167 NE 23 [rev 248 Ill. A. 227].

[f] Finding of jury that they "fixed the value at $1,000" authorized judgment for plaintiff for recovery of property or its value as found. Weill v. Gusdorf, 230 Ky. 64, 18 SW (2d) 879.

[g] Where verdict did not find separate values of the property, it was erroneous to enter a judgment fixing separate values although the pleadings and evidence showed the separate values. Ratliff v. Gordon, (Tex. Civ. A.) 149 SW 196.

[h] Judgment for aggregate value of the property does not conform to a verdict finding the value of each separately. Blankenship v. Berry, 28 Tex. 448.

Peninsular Stove Co. v. Ellis, 20 Ind. A. 491, 51 NE 105. (2) Where the jury found that the intervener was not the owner, nor entitled to possession of the property seized under claim and delivery proceedings, and found the value of the property or proceeds thereof received by the intervener, the court did not err in signing judgment for plaintiff against the intervener. ages.[50] Although a plea of property in a third person has been held to justify judgment for a return,[51] as a general rule it is error to render judgment awarding a return of the property to defendant under a plea of non cepit alone,[52] or of non detinet alone,[53] or on issue joined on pleas of non cepit and non detinet;[54] but under some statutes the plea of non detinet puts in issue not only the detention of the goods, but also the property of plaintiff therein, and justifies a return.[55] If the right of property is put in issue by defendant,[56] on issue being found for him, he is entitled, whether prayed for by the plea or not, to a judgment for a return,[57] or an alternative judgment for a return of the property or its value;[58] but under some statutes, unless defendant claims a return of the property in his plea or answer, he cannot have judgment for a return of the property,[59] or an alternative judgment for a return of the property or its value,[60] or a judgment for its value.[61] Where the property has been taken from defendant and delivered to plaintiff, and judgment is rendered for defendant, it has been held that he cannot recover damages unless a claim therefor is set up in the answer;[62] but under some of the statutes the rule is otherwise.[63] Where the evidence fails to show the delivery of the property to plaintiff, 63. Schrandt v. Young, 62 Nebr. 254, 86 NW 1085; Creighton v. Newton, 5 Nebr. 100.

[a] General denial will permit defendant to recover every item of damage allowable to him for the deten-

a general finding for defendant will not support a judgment for the return of the property;[64] but the general rule is that in replevin, where a plea in abatement is sustained, defendant is entitled to judgment for the return of the property.[65]

[§ 318] g. Amendment and Correction. The rules relating to amendment and correction of judgments in actions generally[66] apply to judgments in replevin.[67] Thus the court may, on proper notice to the parties,[68] modify or correct the judgment so as to mold it in conformity with the verdict or findings,[69] or with the sheriff's return,[70] so that a judgment absolute for the value of the property may be amended into a judgment in the alternative;[71] or a judgment simply for costs into a judgment for a return of the property and costs;[72] or into an alternative judgment;[73] or a judgment for a return modified into one affirming plaintiff's possession;[74] or a money judgment into one for possession of the property.[75] Where plaintiff does not claim delivery of the property, and, notwithstanding, a judgment in the alternative for a return or for the value is entered, plaintiff will be permitted to amend the judgment.[76] An amendment will not be allowed where the judgment in its resulting form would be unwarranted by the verdict or not in accordance with the statute in force at the time of rendition of the original judgment;[77] and where defendant waived a return of the property and took judgment for its value, he cannot subsequently be permitted to have the judgment amended to include an award for the return of the property.[78]

At a subsequent term of court the judgment may not be amended as to make substantial changes,[79] although the court may correct mere matters of form at a subsequent term on notice to the opposing party.[80]

Proper mode of correcting a judgment is by motion and not by appeal,[81] although under certain statutory provisions such correction may be made on appeal.[82]

[§ 319] 2. By Default. As in the case of other civil actions,[83] judgment by default may be had in replevin,[84] and generally may, for good cause, be set aside.[85] A judgment by default may be rendered for want of a sufficient affidavit of defense,[86] and may be entered before the return day of the writ;[87] but to authorize a default judgment for failure to file an affidavit of defense plaintiff must proceed as authorized by statute.[88] A default judgment may

[b] Opening default.—Where a statute provided that plaintiff may take a default judgment upon defendant's failure to file an affidavit of defense within fifteen days of service of plaintiff's declaration, the court cannot open the judgment to curtail plaintiff's statutory right. Chestnut v. Reese, 16 Pa. Dist. 511.

[87] Griesmer v. Hill, 225 Pa. 545, 74 A 429.

[88] See cases infra this note.

[a] Fifteen days' notice to defend-

also be rendered for failure to amend a pleading within the time allowed by statute.[89] A judgment by default cannot be entered where the court has no jurisdiction of defendant,[90] and in some jurisdictions may not be entered against a party who has entered an appearance,[91] and under some statutes, in order to sustain a default judgment, the affidavit in the cause must appear to have been verified.[92] In the absence of a statute to the contrary, in replevin against several defendants, some of whom were not served and none of whom appeared, final judgment cannot be entered against defendants in default until the issue as to the other defendants is disposed of.[93] A judgment by default in replevin for more than the amount claimed in the petition and indorsed on the summons is erroneous,[94] but may be permitted to stand upon remission of the surplus.[95]

Effect of.[96] Although defendant's default operates as an admission of plaintiff's cause of action,[97] and as a forfeiture of any counterbond given by defendant,[98] plaintiff is not entitled to any particular money judgment thereby, but must either proceed to recover the goods by a writ of return or sue out a writ of inquiry for an assessment of damages.[99] A judgment by default is of no effect as against one who was neither a party to the action nor in possession of the property to be replevied.[1]

[§ 320] 3. On Offer. The statutory provisions relating to judgments on offer[2] have been held applicable to an action of replevin.[3] An offer of judgment and its acceptance constitute a contract,[4] and the acceptance and entry of a judgment on a general offer concludes plaintiff from bringing a new action for any part of the property embraced in the judgment.[5] A mere nominal defendant has no right, without the knowledge or consent of the real party in interest, to make a stipulation for dismissal of the suit without judgment, unless the real party in interest has refused to indemnify him;[6] and when he is indemnified a judgment awarding the property to claimant, entered in pursuance of an offer by the nominal party at claimant's instance, without the knowledge of the real party in interest, will be set aside on motion.[7] An offer made after a return of the property to plaintiff, to allow judgment for damages for detention, with costs, without adjudging the title to the property, is insufficient for any purpose.[8]

[§ 321] 4. Partial Recovery.[9] Plaintiff may have judgment according to the extent of his title proved,[10] and if, on an issue as to plaintiff's title, he proves title to only a part of the property, he is entitled to a judgment for such part and defendant may have judgment for a return of the other part,[11] and the damages will be apportioned between them.[12] But a plaintiff in replevin to whom chattels are delivered, having established title to a portion thereof only, is not entitled to judgment, upon surrendering the remainder to persons found by the jury to be owners, who are not made parties;[13] and where the property replevied has been delivered to plaintiff under the writ, it is error to render judgment for him for part of the property, leaving defendant to his remedy on the bond as to the rest, in regard to which the court finds that for want of testimony it is unable to determine the rights of the parties.[14]

[§ 322] 5. Election between Recovery of Property or Value.[15] Where defendant retains possession of the property, plaintiff, on a finding in his favor, may, under statutes in some jurisdictions,[16] either take a judgment for a return only,[17] or waive a return of the property and elect to take a judgment for its value,[18] and on plaintiff's election the court may properly render a simple money judgment in pursuance of such election.[19] But where plaintiff is in possession of the property at the time final judgment is rendered, he cannot, under such statutes, elect to take a judgment for value, but is confined to a judgment affirming his right of possession.[20] Where plaintiff is in possession of the property, defendant, on a finding in his favor, may also, under statutory provisions in some jurisdictions,[21] elect to take a judgment for a return of the property or waive a return and take a judgment for its value,[22] and such right to a money judgment in lieu of the property is absolute.[23] The statute permitting an election by defendant has been held inapplicable to a defendant who has but a special interest in the property.[24] It is not necessary that a party exercise his option before the finding is made, it being sufficient if he exercises it when judgment is taken;[25] and it has been held that the waiver of the right to have a return of the property need not appear of record, the acceptance of a verdict for its value being in effect an election,[26] but other authority is to the contrary.[27] In some jurisdictions, where the property is delivered to plaintiff and he fails in the

In General. Unless there has been a waiver of the right to a return of the property,[30] ordinarily, on a finding in favor of plaintiff[31] or defendant,[32] a judgment for either should include an order for the return of the property,[33] and at least nominal damages.[34] A plaintiff in replevin found to be without title may be ordered to return the property to the one from whom it was taken, although the latter was holding simply in the right of the owner.[35] Although defendant's interest is special or limited, on plaintiff's failure to sustain the action, he is entitled to a judgment for the return of the property.[36] Thus an officer is entitled to a judgment for a return of the property replevied from him while holding it under a distress warrant for rent,[37] or under an execution[38] or attachment,[39] unless pending the action the debtor's interest in the property expires.[40] There are, however, exceptions[41] to the general rule providing for a judgment for a return of the property to the prevailing party;[42] thus a judgment for a return is improper,[43] and a judgment affirming the right of possession proper,[44] where there has been no actual change of possession or at the time of judgment the prevailing party is already in possession.[45] Subject to an exception hereinafter considered,[46] a judgment for defendant for a return should not be entered where he has no interest in the property,[47] or where plaintiff's action is defeated solely by reason of its premature commencement,[48] or where in equity it ought not to be rendered.[49] Although a return cannot generally be ordered to one from whom the property was not taken,[50] it has been held that a defendant is entitled to a return where he was not only entitled to possession, but would have been in possession in a short time but for the issuance of the writ.[51]

[§ 324] b. Property Belonging to Third Persons. The general rule is that the plea of property in a stranger is good,[52] and on issue being found for defendant, he is generally entitled to a return of the property,[53] without connecting himself with the right of such person,[54] and on a general verdict for defendants in replevin, an order of the court for the restoration to him of the property replevied is correct, although plaintiff may have produced evidence that it was owned by a third person, not a party to the suit, jointly with himself.[55]

[§ 325] 7. Alternative Judgments.[56] Statutes ordinarily provide that judgments in replevin shall be entered in the alternative for a return of the property or its value and damages for its detention.[57] Where the prevailing party is not in possession of the property and it does not appear that a return cannot be had, the judgment should follow the statute in providing for a return of the property as well as for its value,[58] and likewise judgment for the value in the alternative as well as for a return should be rendered in pursuance of the statute.[59] In some jurisdictions the alternative judgment for the value of the property is for the benefit of the prevailing party which he may waive.[60] The provision for an alternative judgment does not change the action into one of trover or trespass,[61] but where the action is changed into one for damages under statutes authorizing such change, an alternative judgment is not necessary.[62] Such judgment does not necessarily decide that the successful party is the absolute and unconditional owner of the property.[63] To warrant the entry of such judgment, however, it is necessary that the party be entitled to the possession of the property;[64] but it is not necessary that the property be delivered to plaintiff at the institution of the action to entitle him to such a judgment.[65] In form the alternative judgment should be at least in substantial compliance with the form prescribed by statute.[66] While it appears that some

[a] Sufficiency in form.—(1) A judgment "that the defendant recover of plaintiff the said ninety-one hogs and three calves, or, at his election, take judgment for the sum of $442, the value of said property so adjudged to be returned to him," was a substantial compliance with the statute requiring judgment in the alternative "that the plaintiff return the property or pay the value so assessed at the election of defendant." Herring v. Carder, 49 Mo. A. 378. (2) Judgment in replevin declaring that plaintiff should recover the property, and, in event that it should not be returned, should receive a sum of money, was sufficient under Code Civ. Proc. § 667, being in the alternative. Orchardson v. Christie, 30 Cal. A. 8, 157 P 547. (3) Recital in judgment "that the plaintiff do have and recover of the defendant the possession of the mules [describing them] and in case delivery cannot be had of said property, then that plaintiff do have and recover of the defendant the sum of $440, the value of the property" complied with Rev. Code § 6760 providing for alternative judgments. Chestnut v. Sales, 44 Mont. 534, 121 P 481. (4) Judgment that defendant have and recover of and from the plaintiff the property heretofore replevied, or the sum of seven hundred ninety-four dollars, and the further sum of thirty-nine dollars and ninety-nine cents as damages, together with costs, was not open to the objection that it was not in the alternative. Skow v. Locke, 3 Nebr. (Unoff.) 176, 91 NW 204. (5) Under Revisal (1905) § 570 judgment for plaintiff for the return of the property, if to be had, and, if not then for its value and damages for deterioration and detention was correct in form. Hendricks v. Ireland, 162 N. C. 523, 77 SE 1011.

[b] Insufficiency in form.—(1) Judgment that defendant have and recover from plaintiff the sum of fifteen hundred dollars or the return of the property was not in compliance with the statute requiring that judgment should be "for the return of the property or the value thereof in case a return cannot be had." Etchepare v. Aguirre, 91 Cal. 288; 27 P 668, 929, 25 AmSR 180. (2) A money judgment to be satisfied by a return of the property within thirty days was not an alternative judgment as contemplated by the statute. Bowser Furniture Co. v. Johnson, 117 Ark. 496, 175 SW 516.

statutes are mandatory so that a judgment in the alternative must in all cases be entered,[67] other statutes are regarded as being merely permissive[68] so that a judgment not in the alternative is not void if the particular circumstances warrant its rendition.[69] Thus it has been held that an absolute money judgment is warranted where at the time of trial it is shown that the property cannot be returned[70] for the reason that the property has been disposed of by the unsuccessful party,[71] or has been destroyed,[72] or is not in a proper condition to be returned.[73] Likewise, an alternative judgment for the value of the property is unnecessary where the property is in possession of the court,[74] or in the possession of the prevailing party,[75] and the rule has been extended so that if it appears that the property is capable of delivery to the prevailing party, an alternative judgment for its value is not necessary.[76]

[§ 326] 8. Construction, Operation, and Effect[77] —a. In General. The legal operation and effect of a judgment in replevin must be ascertained by a construction and interpretation of it.[78] Under some statutes the liability of defendants to a replevin judgment is joint and not several,[79] while in other jurisdictions it is considered as joint and several.[80] A replevin judgment is not subject to a collateral attack for irregularities,[81] or for matters properly adjudicated therein.[82] Since the action of replevin is primarily possessory in its character,[83] a judgment in such action ordinarily determines nothing beyond the right to possession.[84] However, where the question of title may be[85] and is adjudicated, such an adjudication is conclusive.[86]

[a] Alternative judgment construed.—(1) Judgment for possession, of property or the value thereof, if delivery could not be had, and for damages for detention, was construed as a judgment for damages for detention, if defendant returned the car, and for the value thereof and damages for detention if he failed to return it. Applegarth v. Weintraub, 60 Cal. A. 24, 212 P 36; Morris v. Allen, 17 Cal. A. 684, 121 P 690. (2) In a replevin action, where the court found that title was in defendant notwithstanding his failure to pay the price owing to plaintiff, a judgment awarding defendant possession or value, with damages for detention during pendency of the trial, was not an adjudication that plaintiff was no longer entitled to payment for the property as an offset against the award of damages. Esmond v. Richards, 112 Wash. 641, 192 P 917.

Effect of alternative judgment.[87] The effect of an alternative judgment as to the right of the unsuccessful party to satisfy such judgment by a return of the property or its value at his option[88] and the effect of such judgment so as to entitle the prevailing party to the choice of suing out a writ of return or an execution for the value of the property are elsewhere considered.[89] On failure of the unsuccessful party to return the property, the alternative judgment for its value becomes a definite and unconditional indebtedness[90] on which an execution may issue.[91] Although an action of debt cannot be maintained on a foreign alternative judgment where the right to return the property has not expired,[92] such an action will lie on such a judgment where a reasonable time has elapsed in which to comply with the alternative provision for a return of the property,[93] or it is an established fact that the property cannot be returned.[94]

Judgment for damages is payable independently of the judgment for a return of the property.[95]

[§ 327] b. Effect on Title to Property.[96] While title to the property will vest in the defeated party on rendition of judgment for the value of the property under statutes authorizing an election to take judgment for the value,[97] a judgment for the value entered in pursuance of an unauthorized election will not vest title in the unsuccessful party.[98] Likewise, where a judgment for the value of the property only is authorized, title will vest in the unsuccessful party on rendition of such judgment.[99] A judgment that plaintiff is entitled to possession of the property without an alternative judgment for its value will not vest title in defendant.[1] It has been held that the effect of an alternative judgment for a return of the property or its value is to vest title in the unsuccessful party subject, however, to the right of the prevailing party to take the property in discharge of so much of the judgment as is made up by the assessed value of the property.[2]

[§ 328] 9. Satisfaction and Discharge[3]—a. In General. An alternative judgment in replevin for a return of the property or its value[4] ordinarily may be satisfied by the unsuccessful party by returning in the proper manner, condition, and quantity[5] the property sued for,[6] or by paying its value when a return is impossible.[7] In some jurisdictions the effect of such a judgment is to give an unsuccessful plaintiff[8] or defendant the choice as to which alternative he will adopt,[9] while in other jurisdictions the alternative character of the judgment is considered such that neither an unsuccessful defendant[10] nor plaintiff[11] has the right to keep the property and pay its assessed value.

Under statutes authorizing an election to take judgment for a return of the property or its value,[12] if plaintiff elects to take judgment for the property a return or proper tender of the property by defendant discharges the judgment in so far as a return of the property is concerned.[13] Neither an unsuccessful plaintiff[14] nor defendant[15] may satisfy the judgment by payment of the value of the property before the prevailing party has elected to take its value.

Judgment for damages,[16] or for the value of the property absolutely under statutes authorizing such judgments,[17] cannot be satisfied, either wholly or in part, by a return of the property. A judgment for damages cannot be satisfied by a conditional tender of the amount due.[18]

Destruction or loss of property ordinarily does not discharge the judgment for a return of the property or its value,[19] but the prevailing party is still entitled generally to the value of the property,[20] or the value of his special interest.[21]

[§ 329] b. Sufficiency of Return—(1) In General. The decisions dealing with the sufficiency of a return in accordance with the replevin judgment to discharge liability on the replevin bond are elsewhere considered in this article.[22] To satisfy a judgment in replevin for a return of the property it is the duty of the unsuccessful party to take active measures to put the prevailing party in possession of the property,[23] and the manner of restoration depends on the circumstances of the particular case.[24] Thus the judgment for a return of the property is satisfied by a delivery,[25] or a proper[26] tender,[27] to the holder of the judgment[28] within a reasonable time,[29] in substantially the same condition as when

[a] Agreement between the attorney for the judgment creditor and the judgment debtor that the latter shall surrender possession of the property in question, and a subsequent written agreement between the attorney and a third person in possession of the goods stipulating that the latter shall ship the property to the judgment creditor, constitutes a sufficient delivery and return of the property to operate as a satisfaction of the judgment. High v. Emerson, 23 Wash. 103, 62 P 455.

[b] Recovery of possession in another action.—An alternative judgment is satisfied, except as to unpaid costs and damages, and the right to alternative relief is waived by the act of the prevailing party in recovering possession of the property in another action. [a] Delivery to one plaintiff is a delivery to all, even though they are hostile to each other. Leve v. Frazier, 42 Or. 141, 7 P 376.

[b] Delivery to duly authorized attorney sufficient.—High v. Emerson, 23 Wash. 103, 62 P 455.

[c] Return to officer on execution would be a sufficient compliance with the statute requiring property to be returned to defendants who were plaintiffs in execution. Osborne v. Banks, 46 Conn. 444.

[d] In Texas, by statute, tender or delivery by defendant is to be made to the sheriff or constable of the court in which the judgment was rendered, rather than to plaintiff in replevin. Childs v. Wilkinson, 15 Tex. Civ. A. 687, 40 SW 749.

[a] Lapse of thirty days was reasonable where the parties lived at a distance of forty miles and at the time of judgment the horse, which was the subject matter, had been injured. McClellan v. Marshall, 19 Iowa 561, 87 AmD 454.

[b] After three years defendants had no right to return property in satisfaction of judgment, at least without showing that the property had not materially depreciated.

taken, without deterioration in value,[30] of all and not merely a portion[31] of the identical property named in the writ.[32] Where the property is bulky in character, an offer to return the property is sufficient;[33] and where the property has not been removed from the place it was replevied and is bulky, an offer to restore possession at such place is ordinarily sufficient to discharge the judgment for its return.[34] It is immaterial whether the property is returned by the unsuccessful party or his sureties.[35]

[§ 330] (2) Rejection of Tender of Depreciated Property. Although it is generally necessary to return the property in substantially the same condition as when taken in order to satisfy the judgment for a return,[36] and to discharge liability on the bond,[37] the decisions are not entirely in harmony as to the right of the prevailing party to reject a tender of the property in pro tanto satisfaction when it has depreciated in value pending the wrongful detention.[38] In some jurisdictions the successful party must accept such a tender in partial satisfaction and is reimbursed for the depreciation by way of damages,[39] and it has been held that a tender of property in a depreciated condition must be accepted where the depreciation was due to no fault of the unsuccessful party, but was a result of natural causes.[40] In other jurisdictions the tendency seems to be that a tender of the property need not be accepted in partial satisfaction of the judgment for a return where the depreciation in value has been substantial,[41] and in some jurisdictions, where the judgment need not specify the separate valuations in the alternative money judgment,[42] the prevailing party may demand a return of not only all of the property, but a return in the same condition, so that unless such a tender is made there is no obligation to accept any part of the property.[43] Where, however, the property is in practically the same condition as when taken,[44] or is not so badly damaged as greatly to impair its value,[45] the tendency is to require the prevailing party to accept it in partial satisfaction of the judgment.

[§ 331] (3) Rejection of Tender of Partial Return. There is a difference of opinion as to whether a prevailing party in a replevin action is under an obligation to accept a partial return of the property in pro tanto satisfaction of the judgment for a return.[46] In some jurisdictions, while it appears that a tender of less than a substantial part of the property need not be accepted,[47] when a substantial part of the property, which is in no way dependent on the part not tendered for its use or value, is tendered, the prevailing party must accept such tender and recoup, if necessary, on execution or on the bond, the value of the part not tendered,[48] and such tender will operate as a defense pro tanto in an action on
